

A GREAT PEACE MAKER

James Gallatin

By David 1822

PEACE MAKER

THE DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

SECRETARY TO ALBERT GALLATIN

1813-1827

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY VISCOUNT BRYCE

ILLUSTRATED

COPYRIGHT, 1914, BY CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

Published November, 1914

PREFACE

IN 1875 my grandfather, James Gallatin, handed me a large sealed packet, telling me it contained his Diary from 1813 until 1827, also many important private documents.

I was not in any case to publish any part of it until 1900. He died the following year. It lay unopened and nearly forgotten until last year. On reading it, I found it of the deepest interest. This decided me (after weeding out large portions and suppressing anything that might offend) to offer it to the public.

It throws a very clear light on the events leading up to the Treaty of Ghent, and on the actual conclusion of that treaty. James accompanied his father, Albert Gallatin, as private and confidential secretary. He was sixteen years of age when the Diary opens.

Albert Gallatin held a unique position. Born at Geneva in 1761, of one of the most aristocratic families, he was left an orphan at an early age, and was brought up by his grandmother, Madame de Gallatin-Vaudene. She was a woman of very strong character, an intimate friend of the Landgrave of Hesse Cassel, and also of Voltaire.

and at that time the possessor of but a small fortune, he suddenly disappeared. The next heard of him was in America.

In this connection the following letter of May 24, 1780 from Benjamin Franklin to Richard Bache, Postmaster General of the United States, is of interest:

DEAR SON,

Messieurs Gallatin and de Serre, two young gentlemen of Geneva of good families and very good characters, having an inclination to see America, if they should arrive in your City I recommend them to your Civilities, Counsel and Countenance.

I am ever your affectionate father,

B. FRANKLIN.

At the age of forty, Albert Gallatin held the position of Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. This post he held until 1814.

In 1813, an official offer having been made by the Russian Minister, Count Dashkoff, of the mediation of Russia, with a view to making peace between England and the United States, Mr. Madison, the President, sent for Mr. Gallatin and requested him to proceed at once to St. Petersburg as head of a mission, appointing Mr. Adams (Minister to Russia) and Mr. Bayard as the other two delegates.

On April 1, 1813, the Treasury was empty; but, with the assistance of John Jacob Astor,* Gallatin was enabled to make terms with the banking houses of Parsh and Girard, and so saved the United States from bankruptcy. It was a bitter pill for the Federalists to swallow that

* John Jacob Astor from Waldorf, Germany. At the age of sixteen he joined his elder brother, a dealer in musical instruments, in London. At the age of twenty with a small pack of furs he started on his own achieved this; it also rather more put American patriotism to the test.

name.

As the Diary will show, the mission to Russia was fruitless. But Gallatin made every effort, and with the aid of his friends, Madame de Staël, Generals Lafayette and Moreau, and Baron Humboldt, he obtained a personal interview with the Emperor Alexander in London. There is no doubt that the latter's influence had great weight. That Albert Gallatin under the greatest difficulties (particularly with his own colleagues) made the Treaty of Peace is now universally acknowledged. His being a foreigner was a great advantage to him as a negotiator in Europe—but placed him at a disadvantage in America.

Lord Castlereagh and the Duke of Wellington were glad to treat with him, and in 1815 he practically completed the Commercial Treaty, though by his tact he allowed Mr. Adams to imagine that he had done so.

He was Minister in France from 1816 until 1823, and was the United States Ambassador in England from 1826 to 1827. He was a man of the most simple tastes but of deep learning. Louis XVIII once laughingly said to him, "Your French is more perfect than mine, but my English is far better than yours."

John Jacob Astor made him the most generous offer of a share in his business, Alexander Baring* did the same; he refused them both with the same answer, "A man holding the position I have must not die rich."

He was offered the Treasury again in 1844. He did not answer the letter, but simply endorsed it, "Folly which I take no notice."

He died in 1849 at the age of eighty-eight. It was always his wish that my father, his eldest grandson, should be a General, and that his children should be

PREFACE

I was brought up by my grandfather, J
the author of this Diary. My father died 1859.

LONDON,
October 1914.

INTRODUCTION

JUST one hundred years ago three envoys from the United States met, at Ghent, three from Great Britain, in order to negotiate for a peace which should close the aimless and indecisive war which those countries had been waging for two years. After many weeks of wrangling, during which they often despaired of success, they succeeded, and on December 24, Christmas Eve, the treaty of the two nations was signed, which has given one hundred years of a peace several times endangered, but never broken, and now far more likely to continue unbroken than it ever was before.

This result was mainly due to the tact, patience, self-control, and wisdom of Albert Gallatin, one of the American Commissioners, the others being John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Bayard and Russell. Born at Geneva in 1761 of an ancient family, originally from Savoy, he had gone to the United States in 1780, had entered Congress in 1795, and had at once risen to distinction there by his remarkable gifts—clearness of thought, power of logic, argument, and steadfastness of purpose. As Secretary of the Treasury in the administrations of Jefferson and Madison from 1800 to 1813, he had resumed the wise financial policy of Alexander Hamilton, another natural and which covers also the period (1826-27) of Albert Gallatin's last special diplomatic mission to England. The latest entry is October 9, 1827.

This Diary, given many years ago by James Gallatin to his grandson, is now published by the latter, Count ~~Albert~~ Gallatin. It is a singularly fresh, frank, and vivid record of the incidents which the young man saw in Holland, France, and England during his stay there, and of the sentiments which those incidents evoked when they happened. Young Gallatin had great advantages as an observer, for while his father's position gave him access to the society of the ruling classes in the countries named, he was himself able to move about more freely than his father could, and see life on its unofficial side. Being moreover a detached observer, and in character and tastes more a Genovese than an American, he was able to survey men and things with an impartially critical eye, which in its youthful confidence spared nobody, except his father, and saw the faults of his American citizens at least as clearly as he did those of Frenchmen or Englishmen.

The intimacy of his daily jottings gives us a lively picture of the Gallatin family. His mother was a typical New Englander of that time, altogether well regulated, and so loyal to her Puritan piety that she refused to attend on a Sunday any of the State and Court functions which the customs of the Bourbon Restoration allotted to that day. His sister, also well regulated, was not without liveliness and spirit. James, the diarist, is a bright fellow with plenty of humour and by no means well regulated. The ruling figure is, of course, the illustrious father. The picture of his character is all the more interesting because Albert Gallatin was a singularly reserved and to some extent reserved to the weak sides of democracy. His persevering high sense of duty, and his clear, strong judgment both in the notices of his conduct in difficulties and in the letters from his pen, some few of which have been very properly inserted in the book. Such an American history will value these familiar glimpses of a man who did not in his own day receive from the American public the credit which his disinterestedness as well as his abilities deserved. He was not without popularity, and he certainly never sought it. With or under whom he worked recognized his worth, and though there had often been friction between him and John Quincy Adams, that upright and public-spirited man insisted on his accepting the mission to France in 1826, which Gallatin had sought to avoid.

There are in this book many interesting notices of the remarkable events and personages of the nineteenth century. Napoleon Bonaparte (during the Hundred Days), the Duke of Wellington pass across the stage of the Eighteenth appears frequently, and the Duke of Berri, of whose assassination in 1820 there is a full account. So does King George the Fourth and Alexander I of Russia, and his Minister Pozzo di Borgo, the only Corsican, except the Bonapartes and Napoleon, who has figured in European history since the tenth century. We hear a good deal about Lafayette and Marquis de Staël, and Joseph Bonaparte and Madame Bonaparte (the wife of Jerome Bonaparte), with the other personages more or less fully touched upon. There are also Alexander von Humboldt, Lord Castlereagh, Charles Fox, Talleyrand (of whom there is a good deal), Count d'Orsay, Madame Récamier, Count George Canning, Lord Goderich, and those

INTRODUCTION

it is so softened by the lapse of a century, the descendants of the persons implicated care. The anecdotes and the gossip preserve the picture of the society of the time, more disreputable, more intemperate in England, more corrupt in France. On the social as well as the political side, the diary is a valuable contribution to history, and Europeans and Americans may be glad that the Diary of the diarist has not shared the common fate of the diaries of young men consign their personal exper-

CONTENTS

PART I

FROM THE RUSSIAN OFFER OF MEDIATION
CONCLUSION OF THE TREATY OF GHEEN

PART II

FROM THE CONCLUSION OF THE TREATY TO THE SIGNATURE OF THE TREATY
MERCE

PART III

THE MINISTRY IN FRANCE: FROM THE RE
OF THE BOURBONS TO THE ASSASSIN
THE DUC DE BERRI

PART IV

THE MINISTRY IN FRANCE: FROM THE
TION OF THE DUC DE BERRI TO THE R
ALBERT GALLATIN TO AMERICA

PART V

THE SPECIAL MISSION TO ENGLAND

Dear Son,

Paris, May 24. 1780

Messieurs Galatin & De Saussure, two young Gentlemen of Geneva, of good Families and of good Characters; having an Inclination to see America, if they should arrive in your City, recommend them to your civilities, counsel and Countenance. I am ever

Your affectionate Father

B. Franklin

"I have made up my mind that I could in no other manner be more usefully employed for the present than on the negotiation of a peace. Peace is at all times desirable. England must be desirous at this critical moment to have it in her power to apply her whole force on the continent of Europe, and the mediation of Russia saves her pride."

Diary resumed:

MAY 9, 1813

We sailed to-day from Newcastle—a ship called the Neptune, 300 tons—Captain Lloyd Jones, J. A. Bayard, G. H. Dallas, George Milligan, John Todd, father, and myself.

MAY 10

Head-winds. I am a bad sailor. I share father's cabin. He comes in now and then and looks at me gravely. He says he has no time to think of being sick.

MAY 11

A British frigate at anchor; she sent a boat with a lieutenant and the captain's compliments to father saying that he would be pleased to see him on board. Of course he declined, but sent Dallas and Milligan to present his compliments. Captain Jones also took Admiral Warren's passport to have it endorsed. The frigate is the Spartan—her Captain's name is Braynton.

JUNE 20: GOTTENBURG

We anchored in the quarantine grounds this morning. It being Sunday we only got our permission from Gottenburg to land in the evening. I landed at the only a barren rock. Returned on board at 10.30.

JUNE 21

We hired two boats to take us to Gottenburg. We landed five miles from Gottenburg as the current was so strong. We fortunately found carriages to take us to the town. While we waited for them we went into some of the houses. They are very dirty, horrible smells. All the women are crying and blow their noses on their aprons. Such apologies for carriages—simply open carts, four of them, each drawn by half-starved ponies; wooden springs to the wheels. The River Gotha full of shipping. We stopped at the house of a Mr. Dixon a nice Scotsman who had been American Consul. Several Americans came to see us.

JUNE 22

Returned to our ship after breakfast—sailed in the evening. . . . Father found a courier going to England and entrusted him with a letter to Alexander Barin which I copied for him.*

JUNE 25: COPENHAGEN

We landed this morning. Went to Bachalan's Hotel. Father let me go to see all the sights and afterwards questioned me by way of teaching me history.

JULY 1

We went on board this morning. South-east wind which delays us greatly. Father called me on deck and pointed out where Lord Nelson fought his battle in 1801. He says all the fortifications are new. It was bombarded in September 1807. Most of the houses destroyed and over two thousand killed. There seem to be

The King lives most simply. The Ministers have merely nominal salaries. Father says he cannot understand England and Russia's conduct toward Norway. It has thrown the nation into the hands of the French against their will. Great poverty and distress and much discontent. The people struck me as most civil; they looked weary and oppressed, but are very sober.

JULY 3

Always head-winds. I do hope we will finish this voyage soon, it is so monotonous. Father wishes me to do a certain amount of work every day. I feel it is good for me and it certainly makes the time pass more rapidly.

JULY 8

Lovely weather but still head-winds. Just called on deck to see the coast of Courland. All on board are getting very weary and impatient to land. Father always keeps his serene temper.

JULY 12

Entered Gulf of Finland. We will soon be at the end of our voyage.

JULY 21: ST. PETERSBURG

After a tedious journey with little to interest one we arrived at St. Petersburg. It is very beautiful. Weather very warm.

JULY 23

Have been sight-seeing all day. St. Petersburg is very fine—great width of the streets and fine palaces. In the evenings father tells me much of Russian history. Mr. Adams* very civil but has a disagreeable manner. He is from New England, a "Yankee" father is much disappointed that no steps have been taken by England beyond a note discouraging arbitration altogether. He fears the English Government reserves the offer of Russian mediation and that the President was a little hasty in sending the mission.

The Emperor is not at St. Petersburg but with his army fighting Napoleon. He left Count Romanzoff in charge of foreign affairs and has taken Count Nesselrode with him. This father greatly regrets, as Count Nesselrode has great influence with the Emperor and thinks it to the interest of Russia to remain in close friendship with England. Count Romanzoff, on the contrary, was the instigator of the offer of mediation on the part of Russia and he disapproves of the overpowering dominion of England on the sea. . . .

JULY 29

Our position is a very embarrassing one. We plainly see we are not wanted. Romanzoff is pressing the Emperor to renew his offer of mediation to England. . . .

AUGUST 6

Much weary waiting, and all seems so hopeless. My father's wonderful calm and patience surprise one and all. I, of course, being so young, find plenty of amusement here; all is so new to me. To-day, after all correspondence was terminated, father began to talk to me. He warned me as to my future life—that is, if I decide to remain in America—never, above all things, to forget my birth and the duties that birth brings—never to do anything to dishonour a name which for centuries has never borne a stain—always to remember that truth and nobility was simplicity—always to be civil, particularly wealth in minerals, &c. &c., must be enormous. Men of business would come with the lust of gold—without scruples or conscience or education—that would be terrible corruption—never to mix myself with a man who did not carry on his business or in an honest manner—far better to die poor than to sully my name—that the country might be free for years from corruption—immense fortunes made and lost and men of evil repute would, by the power of their money, keep corruption and dishonesty afloat. . . .

AUGUST 9

I never saw people drink as the Russians. The buffet covered with bottles and glasses. They drink seven or eight glasses of vodka before going into dinner. I have never to of any kind. After dinner the young men and disgusting. . . .

AUGUST 11

Yesterday the Emperor's answer was come from the father and the other envoys. He authorized the offer to renew offer of mediation to England, by direct to London. . . .

AUGUST 24

Count Romanzoff summoned the envoys and gave them the dispatches renewing the offer. Fatigue made two or three alterations and they were made. I was writing all day—my head is in a whirl, b

Je ne suis pas aveugle sur la position actuelle de ce pays, mais j'aurai toujours de la partialité pour lui. Je m'intéresserai toujours à son bonheur et à son succès.

Le refus du gouvernement anglais doit vous mettre dans une situation très-désagréable.

Je vois d'ici les Fédéralistes exagérés rire des maux de leur pays par l'espoir de voir le triomphe de leur parti, et les exagérés du parti contraire en profiter contre vous et le Président; car il ne faut pas vous en flatter, quelque mécontentement que le refus des Anglais de traiter en Russie puisse occasionner la guerre ne sera pas nationale; il y'a trop d'égoïsme; trop de richesse dans toutes les classes, et pas assez d'argent dans les caisses de l'état, pour qu'on puisse espérer un mouvement assez vigoureux de la nation qui la mette dans une attitude imposante.

Les Anglais veulent, dit-on, traiter de la paix sans médiation. Je le crois, mais il est à craindre que la

If it had been the Royalists who slew Robespierre, the Republicans would have thanked them twenty-four hours after.

I was indeed sorry to hear that in spite of the powerful intervention of his Imperial Majesty your mission would not meet with the success that we anticipated. As one of the English ministers in Germany said to me, "The English will not admit of any mediation when their rights at sea are under discussion."

I have not the honour to be an American, but I am deeply interested in the fate of a country where I have stayed so long and where I have received so many marks of kindness. I am far from being blind to the present position of your country, but I shall always have an interest in her welfare and success.

The refusal of the English Government must place you in a very disagreeable position. I can imagine the extreme Federals laughing at disasters to their country in the hope of a party triumph; while I can see the Extremists on the other side making capital out of them to discredit you and the President. There is no use in deceiving yourself; America may be irritated by the English refusal to treat humain et le plus honnête que je connaisse, me comble d'amitié. Il s'intéresse aux Américains et sera toujours prêt, j'en suis sur, à user de toute son influence pour leur procurer la paix. Si je pouvais vous être bon à quelque chose ou pour votre mission ou pour vous-même veuillez disposer de moi et croire aux sentiments de la considération la plus distinguée avec laquelle je suis votre très-humble et très-obéissant serviteur.

MOREAU,

Au Quartier-Général Impérial, Hrushova, 21 Août, 1813.

SEPTEMBER 15: WEDNESDAY

No answer from England. Father greatly distressed at the death of General Moreau.

SEPTEMBER 20

Nothing doing rê mediation; we have to wait patiently for answer. Father thinks nothing can be done in Russia and is anxious to go to England.

SEPTEMBER 25

We amuse ourselves as best we can. It is not the season here. St. Petersburg deserted, hot with wind and dust. I go to the theatre and occasionally dine out. . . .

OCTOBER 19

A thunderclap to-day. Letters from Washington; one announcing officially that the Senate had rejected father's nomination as head of the Commission by one vote. . . .

THE SECRETARY OF STATE to the AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

August 5, 1813

GENTLEMEN,

I am very sorry to be under the necessity of conenate of the nomination of Mr. Gallatin on the id that his mission to Russia was incompatible with th office of Secretary of the Treasury.

After the appointment of Mr. Jay, when Chief Just f the United States, by President Washington, and Mr. Ellsworth, when holding the same office, by Preside
Adams, by which a member of a separate branch of th Government was brought into an office under the Exec ve, and after the sanction given in practice as well y law to the appointment of persons during the absen f a head of a department to perform its duties, it w resumed that there would not be any serious or su stantial objection to the employment in a similar servi
f a member of the Administration itself.

Although this nomination was opposed in the Sena
s soon as it was acted on, yet it was not believed tha would be rejected until the vote was taken. At a early stage the President was called on by a resolutio
f the Senate to state whether Mr. Gallatin retained th office of Secretary of the Treasury, and, in case he di who performed the duties of that department in h bsence. The President replied that the office of Sec ary was not vacated by Mr. Gallatin's appointment t ussia, and that the Secretary of the Navy performe
s duties in his, Mr. Gallatin's, absence. After th eply, which was given in conformity with the President wn views of the subject, and with those of Mr. Gallati hen he left the United States, it was impossible for th resident, without departing from his ideas of propriety a both respects, to have removed Mr. Gallatin from e Treasury to secure the confirmation of his nominatio
o Russia. It would have been still more improper t ave taken that step after the rejection of the nomina
The President, however, had the opportunity to done jointly under the Commission, given to the three Commissioners by the President when you left the United States, in compliance with your instructions will not be affected by this event.

OCTOBER 22

Father had an interview with Count Romanzoff to-day. The latter begs him to remain in St. Petersburg but he thinks he ought, perhaps, to return at once to the Treasury. He feels now that he can act as he chooses as he is free. His political enemies are gaining power. He is strongly impressed with the idea that he ought to resume the negotiations. . . .

OCTOBER 24

After a stormy interview with Mr. Adams (Adams was the storm) father has decided to take his own course. He is sending Mr. Dallas to London to see Lord Castlereagh, Count Lieven* and Mr. Baring, with the object of being in direct communication with them. . . .

OCTOBER 26

Father thinks of going himself to England or to go direct to the Emperor's headquarters. Count Romanzoff spoke to father a few days since about a Count Joseph Galati, a major-general in the Russian army. He wanted an introduction. He is going to call to-morrow, as he is only passing through St. Petersburg on his way to join the Emperor. . . .

OCTOBER 27

Count Galati called this afternoon. He says he is a branch of our family; that his family were from Savigliano in the Piedmont; that his father was intimate with Count Paul Michael de Gallatin, Councillor of State of

He was very charming, and father does not doubt the relationship. Count Paul Michael was the head of the family and my father was his ward. Count Galati is a great person in Russia. He was in full uniform, covered with orders and stars. He kindly explained them to me. He has the following orders: the Military Orders of St. George and St. Vladimir of Russia, St. Maurice and St. Lazare of Sardinia, and the Sovereign Order of St. Jean of Jerusalem. He so deeply regrets he is leaving to-morrow as he wishes us to go to his country house. .

OCTOBER 28

Lord Walpole has arrived. Father is greatly annoyed by his openly talking of Count Romanzoff's "intrigues."

OCTOBER 30

Count Romanzoff has just sent father a note informing him that he intended retiring from office but that he will remain Chancellor until he has closed the affairs of the session.

DECEMBER 1

It seems all the trouble has been made by the Emperor not getting to communicate a most important note to Count R., which put him in a false position. So after all Lord Castlereagh was not to blame. . . .

JANUARY 12, 1814

Father has decided to leave St. Petersburg as there is no word from the Emperor. . . .

JANUARY 26

We leave to-day. Mr. Bayard accompanies us.

ARCH 5: AMSTERDAM

We learnt with great pleasure to-day that Lord Castlereagh's offer of direct negotiations has been accepted by the President by the appointment of a new Commission. Father's name was omitted. It seems the President thinks he is on his way back to take up the Treaty.

MARCH 20

The President has discovered the mistake and Father as one of the Commission. . . .

MARCH 22

Father received to-day the necessary permission from Mr. Baring to visit England. We are leaving immediately. . . .

APRIL 9: LONDON

Arrived here to-day.

APRIL 11

Father wants to change the place for the negotiations. He thinks London would be far better. He will be in direct touch with Lord Castlereagh. We are comfortably settled in apartments in Seymour Street. I find London very dull in comparison to Paris and Petersburg. Our position is not a very pleasant one. We have many invitations, and I think all mean to be kind, but there is always a feeling of constraint. The only house where we seem to be really at home is Mr. Baring's.

APRIL 13

Father sees a great deal of his old friend M. Dumont.* He brought Jeremy Bentham† to see him to-day. We dine with Monsieur D. to-morrow.

* André Dumont, politician, born 1764, died 1836. Ba † J. B. Bentham

. . . Dined with Lord Bathurst, stiff and formal. . . .

PRIL 15

Oh! the horrors of Sunday in London. It is indeed day of rest.

Englishwomen are not pretty; they are either coarse or very delicate. Complexions fine but too red. Dress no very badly—no taste. . . .

PRIL 17

I have been nearly every day to the British Museum.
I rather wanted many works consulted and not taken. . . .

I looked up Barthélemy de Gallatin.* He was Colonel of the Mounted Grenadiers. He died in 1786 and is buried at Brompton near his country house. I found his name in c. &c., in an old Army list. He left two daughters. . . .

PRIL 18

I have seen the Prince Regent walking in the Mall.
He is handsome. The Queen I have seen several times.
She keeps great state. . . .

The following letters of Albert Gallatin to W. H. Crawford and General Lafayette are of interest in connection with the negotiations as showing the diplomatic difficulties with which the mission had to contend.

ALBERT GALLATIN to W. H. CRAWFORD†

LONDON, April 21, 1815

MY DEAR SIR,

Mr. Bayard and myself left St. Petersburg on January 25, remained four weeks at Amsterdam, and arrived here on the 9th inst. I could not write to you earlier, there having been no communication with Paris.

* Barthélemy de Gallatin, Lieut.-Colonel Second Troop of Horse Guards.

having offered the first safe opportunity for a confidential letter.

Messrs. Clay and Russell, who are jointly with Messrs Adams and Bayard appointed to open a direct negotiation for peace with Great Britain, arrived at Gottenburg on the 12th inst., after a passage of forty-six days; but as they had not reached the town when the last packer sailed, we have not yet received any letter from them or any American news brought by the vessel in which they came.

There is a newspaper report of Norfolk, under date of February 12, stating that G. W. Campbell was made Secretary of the Treasury, Rush Attorney-General, and that I had been nominated fifth Commissioner to treat of peace with England. My stay in Europe will, of course, depend on the official account which Messrs. Clay and Russell will have brought. You are sufficiently aware of the critical situation in which the restoration of a general European peace has placed our affairs. The numerous English forces in France, Italy, Holland, and Portugal ready for immediate service, and for which there is no further employment in Europe, afford to this Government the means of sending both to Canada and to the United States a very formidable army, which we are not prepared to meet with any regular, well-organized force; and they will also turn against us as much of their superabundant Naval forces as they may think adequate to any object they may have in view. In the prosecution of the war the Ministry would be supported by the general voice of the nation. In the intoxication of an unexpected success, which they ascribe to themselves, the English people eagerly wish that their pride may be fully gratified by what they call the "punishment of America." The that such opinions should be almost universally entertained here by the great body of the people is not at all astonishing. To produce such an effect, and therefore render the American war popular, the Ministerial power have had nothing more to do than to transcribe American federal speeches and newspapers. If Pickering, Quincy, Strong, Hanson, &c., have not brought a majority of the American people to their side, they have at least succeeded here, and had no difficulty in convincing that part of the English community which derives information from political journals that we had no cause of complaint, and acted only as allies of Bonaparte. I understand that the members of the Cabinet do not participate in that opinion, but it will certainly require effort on their part against popular feeling to make peace with America. It must be added that even though (as the Cabinet) a belief is said to be entertained that the continuance of the war would produce a separation of the Union, and perhaps a return of the New England States to the Mother Country. The multitude of persons in the Army or Navy, or connected with the war, attached to the governing party, and whom peace will throw out of employment, will also press on Government; and although it is probable that the immense military and naval establishments of this country will be so far reduced as to enable Government to dispense with the most unpopular war taxes, a prosecution of the war against the United States would afford a convenient pretence for preserving a much more considerable standing force than is necessary and would otherwise be allowed by Parliament. It may, on the whole, be reasonably inferred that the Ministers will be neither disposed to make the least concession—for doing us justice on any point would

Alexander, not as a mediator but as a common friend, expressing on this Government the propriety of an accommodation, and expressing his strong wishes for a general restoration of peace to the civilized world. I do not know whether your situation affords you means of approaching him, and can only state my opinion of the great importance that an early opportunity should be taken by you, or any other person you may think fit for the object, to call his attention to the situation in which we are left, and to the great weight which his opinion in favour of peace on liberal conditions, strongly expressed to this Government, must necessarily have at this time. Of his friendly disposition for the United States there is no doubt; but we may be forgotten, and it is necessary that he should be apprised of the hostile spirit which prevails here, and which, if not balanced by some other cause, may even carry Ministers beyond their own wishes and views. It should also be stated that our Government, having accepted only a year ago the Emperor's mediation, and not having supposed that, considering the political connection between him and Great Britain, she could reject that offer, no other provision was made on our part to obtain peace until our Government was apprised in January last of the rejection of the mediation by England. Thus was a delay of a year produced, and the opening of our negotiations unfortunately prevented till after England is at peace with the rest of the world; a circumstance which, although it does not give us a positive right to claim the Emperor's interference, affords sufficient ground to present the subject to his consideration. I entreat you to lose no time in taking such steps as may be in your power in that respect, and to write to me whatever you may think it right to do.

Secretary of State, or of Mr. Poletica, directing to under cover of "Count Lieven, Ambassador Extraordinary of H.I.M. the Emperor of all the Russias, London."

I send General la Fayette's patents, which were entaneously put in my hands instead of yours, and wh-
I have had no previous safe opportunity to trans-My last letters from my family were dated January when they were all well; but I have none of a late da-from Government or from any of its members.

I am, my dear sir, with great respect and sincer-attachment, truly yours.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

ALBERT GALLATIN to GENERAL LAFAYETTE

LONDON, April 21, 18

DEAR SIR,

I regret that your patents should be put in my hands instead of being entrusted to Mr. Crawford, as no sa-opportunity has as yet offered itself for their conveyance.
I had the pleasure of seeing very often your friend Tracy at St. Petersburg, and left him there in good health on January 25.

I believe that I am not mistaken in offering you my congratulations on the late events in France. It would certainly have been desirable that the changes should have been produced by the spontaneous will of the French people rather than to appear to have been forced by a foreign army. But if such was to be the mode, you are most singularly fortunate that the Emperor Alexander should have been the agent. With respect to the result itself, I think that every friend of rational liberty and humanity must rejoice at the overthrow of the detestable tyranny under which you and a great part of Europe lived never made me desirous that it should, by way of experiment, be applied to countries which might be better fitted for a limited monarchy. And if this be that which suits you best, I think the ancient dynasty in every respect preferable to a new one. Unfortunately, whilst the greater part of the civilized world rejoices at the restoration of a general peace, the United States alone remain at war, and are placed in a more critical situation than ever they were since the first years of their revolution. Pride, avarice, and ambition will throw here great obstacles to an accommodation for which there has ever been, on our part, the most sincere disposition. I write to you well knowing your unalterable attachment for America, and that, if in your power, you will lend your assistance in promoting that result.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

Diary resumed :

APRIL 23

Father very busy. He has been in close conference with Lords Castlereagh, Liverpool, and Bathurst. There is much to be discussed. . . .

APRIL 26

Still waiting to hear when the English Commission think of starting for Ghent. Father would have much preferred carrying out the negotiation in London, but our other Commissioners refused point-blank; they were either afraid or too proud to come to England. Of course they look upon father as a foreigner. This has annoyed him very much. He will, I fear, have a very tough time of it in keeping his colleagues in unison, although, by the accident of his being appointed last on the Commission, he is practically the least influential.

and a sincere friend to the cause of liberty. We have long conversed upon American affairs. It began with his telling me that he had read with much pleasure and interest what I had sent him. I found ideas had been suggested that had excited a fear that the people of the United States had not properly improved their internal situation. My answer was an observation upon the necessity of parties in a Commonwealth, and the assertion that these were the happiest and freest people upon earth. The transactions with France and England were explained in the way that, although the United States had to complain of both, the British outrages came nearest home, particularly in the affair of impressments. He spoke of the actual preparation and the hostile dispositions of England.

I, of course, insisted on the importance of his mediation. The confidence reposed in him by the United States, which hastened to send Commissioners chosen from both parties, and which he very kindly acknowledged. He said he had twice attempted to bring on a peace. "Do, sir," said I, "make a third attempt; it must succeed; ne vous arrêtez pas en si beau chemin. All the objects of a war at an end, the re-establishment of their old limits can be less opposed, as the Americans have gained more than they have lost. A protraction of the war would betray intentions quite perverse and hostile to the cause of humanity. Your personal influence must carry the point. I am sure your Majesty will exert it." "Will," says he, "I promise you I will. My journey to London affords opportunities, and I will do the best I can." I told him I had received a letter from Mr. Gallatin now in London, and we spoke of him, Mr. Adams, Mr. Bayard, and the two new Commissioners. I had also other occa-

letter from my friend Mr. Jefferson, of whom she spoke with great regard. This led to observations relative to the United States and the spirit of monopoly in England extending even to liberty itself. The Emperor said, that he had been more liberal in Sicily than I supposed they did not deny it, but expressed my fears of their protecting Ferdinand against the Cortes. His sentiments on the Spanish affairs were noble and patriotic. The slave trade became a topic upon which he spoke with philanthropic warmth. Its abolition will be an article in the general peace. You see, my dear sir, I had fully the opportunity we were wishing for. If it has not been well improved, the fault is mine. But I think some good has been done. And upon the promise so candid and generous I have full dependence. If you think proper to communicate these details to Mr. Gallatin, be pleased to have them copied. He spoke very well of him, and seemed satisfied with the confidence of the United States and the choice of their representatives to him. By the best accounts Mr. Adams was at St. Petersburg.

The particulars of this conversation ought not, of course, to be published; but you will probably think it useful to communicate to the Commissioners. . . .

JUNE 2

The Emperor is expected in London next week. The European Treaty of Peace has been signed. He comes the guest of England. This will make it more difficult for father, as the position will be a delicate one. Lord Castlereagh arrives to-day or to-morrow. It seems that the exclusion of all Maritime questions or any interference with America was one of the conditions of the Chatillon conference.

JUNE 6

He received a letter from M. Lafayette this morning, from Paris. It gave him a brief résumé of his interview with the Emperor Alexander at Madame de Staël's. He begs father if possible to remain in England to have a personal interview with the Emperor, which he says the Emperor promised to grant him—but that it must be of a private nature. He also mentions that Baron Humboldt has also approached his Majesty—and adds that the latter "puts himself at your disposal."

JUNE 10

The Emperor arrived to-day. He is lodged at Leicester House, Leicester Fields. This is the palace that the eldest daughter of James I occupied; she was known as the "One-year Queen of Bohemia." Her daughter was the Electress Sophia, mother of George I. . . .

JUNE 14

The Emperor's aide-de-camp called to-day. He said the Emperor had sent him to say that on June 18 he would receive us privately at 11.30. . . .

As it is a delicate matter there has not been any correspondence on the subject. . . .

JUNE 18

As arranged, his Majesty received father this morning. We went accompanied by Mr. Levitt Harris, a secretary to the St. Petersburg Mission. Our minister offered the loan of his coach. This father thought wise to refuse, and hired a common hackney-coach so as to attract as little attention as possible. The streets were crowded. It is the day of the banquet given by the City of London to the allied Sovereigns. Only father and myself were admitted to his Majesty's presence. There were crowds waiting for audiences. We were passed in at once.

Father was presented and then presented me; then all withdrew except his Majesty. He is a splendid-looking man, was in full uniform and covered with jewelled orders and stars. He was most gracious, and said he had the most friendly feeling toward the United States. He added that he feared his intervention would be of little use—that he had made three attempts since he had been here, but that “England will not admit a third party to interfere in her disputes with you.” This he said on account of our former Colonial relations, which are not forgotten. He also expressed an opinion with regard to the conditions of peace, saying: “The difficulty will be with England.” He also spoke of Madame de Staël as a woman of “great brain and courage.” He congratulated father on being her cousin. Father expressed his deep gratitude to his Majesty for granting him an audience, and the gratitude of the United States for the interest and friendship he had shown. As we withdrew he patted me on the head and said, “You are rather young to be in diplomacy.”

I wore a suit of Chinese nankeen, white silk stockings, high white choker, with a breast-pin of seed-pearls mother gave me before I left home. They call my hair auburn—I call it red. I am afraid I looked very young.

Poor Mr. Levitt Harris was furious at not being present, but the Emperor's order was “Monsieur Gallatin et son fils.”

JUNE 19: LONDON, SUNDAY

Copied note which the Emperor gave father permission to send. The latter does not think it will have any effect. The illuminations last night were very fine—far surpassing anything I have ever seen. Although father is an “Envoy Extraordinary” here, his position is of such a delicate nature that it is impossible for him to accept any public invitations.

JUNE 20

Lord Castlereagh informed father that the English Mission will start on July 1 for Ghent. . . .

JUNE 21

We leave to-morrow for Ghent by way of Paris, where we will remain for a week if possible. . . .

JUNE 26: PARIS, SUNDAY

We arrived at five o'clock to-day.

JUNE 27

Father had a long visit from General de Lafayette, accompanied by Baron Humboldt.* They were both much pleased that he had had an interview with the Emperor Alexander, but both agree with him that they fear now Russian mediation will be of little use. . . .

JUNE 29

I saw the King to-day driving in state . . . went to the Français in the evening—Racine's Phèdre very fine. The King and other members of the Royal Family were present.

JUNE 30

I went to Versailles to-day. What memories it awakens, particularly the Petit Trianon! I do not think there is a palace in the world to equal Versailles. I shut my eyes and conjured up Louis XIV and his Court with all its splendours. I was accompanied by a son of the Duc de la Rochefoucauld D'Enville. He is most interesting, and told me many quaint episodes of history. One which impressed and amused me was that when the Electress Sophia, "mother of George I," came on one occasion to visit her sister, the Duchesse d'Orléans, on taking leave of the Queen, etiquette required that she should only raise the skirt of the Queen's robe and kiss it, being only an electress. The Queen, to avoid her doing this, stepped behind a chair, and the electress kissed the chair.

* Baron Humboldt, born 1767, died 1835. Statesman and Author.

JULY 1

We leave to-morrow for Ghent by easy stages as father is not feeling very well. . . .

JULY 7: GHENT, THURSDAY

We arrived here to-day and are lodged very comfortably in the Hotel d'Alcantara, corner of the Rue des Champs. Ghent looks clean and cheerful. The inhabitants speak only Flemish. All seem employed in commerce. There is an English garrison here; the uniforms make the streets very bright.

They call private residences hôtels in this country. The house is large and all the delegates are to lodge here.

JULY 9

No news of the English Mission.

JULY 15

Nothing to do. Mr. Adams in a very bad temper. Mr. Clay annoys him. Father pours oil on the troubled waters. I am now reading a history of the Low Countries. . . . The women are so ugly here. . . .

We had waffles for breakfast—it reminded me of home. It seems they are an old Dutch dish. . . .

AUGUST 7

At last! The British Mission arrived this afternoon. We heard they were coming and I actually saw them arrive. They are lodged in a fine Carthusian monastery. . . .

AUGUST 8

To-day was the first meeting. The British Commissioners, as a base of discussion re the treaty—demanded that the Indian tribes should have the whole of the North-Western Territory.

This comprises the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois—four-fifths of Indiana and the third of Ohio. That an Indian sovereignty should be constituted under the guarantee of Great Britain: this is to protect Canada. Father mildly suggested that there were more than a hundred thousand American citizens settled in these States and territories. The answer was: "They must look after themselves." Father is not impressed with the British delegates. They are Lord Gambier, Henry Goulburn,* and William Adams—men who have not made any mark and have no influence or weight. He attaches but little importance to them as they are but the puppets of Lords Castlereagh and Liverpool. Father feels he is quite capable of dealing with them. . . .

AUGUST 9

The other demands are of little importance. They consist of Sackett's Harbour and Fort Niagara, so as to have control of the lakes. But all this means the dismemberment of the United States. . . .

Father drafted the rejection of the British "Sine qua non."

AUGUST 10

Father finds greater difficulty with his own colleagues. The accident which placed him at the foot of the Commission placed Mr. Adams at the head of it. Messrs. Clay, Bayard, and Russell let Mr. Adams plainly know that, though he might be the nominal mouthpiece, Gallatin was their leader. Clay uses strong language to Adams, and Adams returns the compliment. Father looks calmly on with a twinkle in his eye. To-day there was a severe storm, and father said, "Gentlemen, gentlemen, we must remain united or we will fail. . . ."

* Henry Goulburn (1784-1856). Member for Horsham, 1808. Under Secretary for Home Affairs, 1810. Under Secretary for War, 1812. Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Duke of Wellington, 1828. Home Secretary, 1835. He was elected member for Cambridge University in 1831.

AUGUST 11

Mr. Adams insisted upon drafting the first dispatch to-day and submitted to the others for a revision. Mr. Bayard used it simply as a foundation for his own draft; after quarrelling they referred to father. He put it into shape, and after endless discussion all the Commissioners ended by adopting it. After this father drafted all other dispatches. He wishes all dispatches to be without any offence to the feeling of the English delegates.

AUGUST 12

He fears negotiations will soon come to an end and has but little hope; he does not think the British Government wish to make peace or they would have sent more powerful delegates.

AUGUST 20

To-day I copied a private note from him to Mr. Monroe: "We will not remain here long, the position is untenable; I am preparing for departure. Our negotiations may be considered at an end. Great Britain wants war in order to cripple us; she wants aggrandisement at our expense. I do not expect to be longer than three months in Europe."

Still lingering on and nothing arrived at. We are kept in absolute ignorance of the cause of the delay. It is most galling. It seems Mr. Goulburn does everything to obstruct matters. This may be to gain time to receive his orders from Lord Castlereagh. . . .

AUGUST 21

We all dine at the Intendant's to-day, the delegates of both sides.

They always entertain here on Sunday—how different from London! It is the gayest day. The working people have a cheerful holiday; in London they show joy by getting drunk. . . .

AUGUST 22

Mr. Clay sat next to Mr. Goulburn; he told father afterwards that he had decidedly made Goulburn understand that we intended to await further instructions from America. Mr. Bayard also had a long conversation after dinner with Mr. Goulburn, but he said he made no impression. . . .

AUGUST 23

Lord Castlereagh arrived here to-day on his way to Vienna.

AUGUST 24

He had a long conference with his delegates, after which he saw father, and was most gracious. I was present. He said he had written to Lord Liverpool. . . .

AUGUST 26

Father much fears that Mr. Adams will do harm. . . .

SEPTEMBER 3

Father is much annoyed with Mr. Goulburn. He saw him to-day. The latter said: "I don't think you have the slightest intention of making peace." Father answered: "Surely you cannot mean this! Why should I have taken the long journey to Russia in 1813 and given up everything else in the one hope of making peace?"

SEPTEMBER 4

We have given notice to our landlord and intend leaving on October 1. Father is quite convinced that Mr. Goulburn has made some serious mistakes and that he has been reprimanded.

SEPTEMBER 5

A note from Lord Bathurst: the pith of it is that it would be more becoming on the part of the United States to agree to surrender the Lakes to England and the North-West Territory to the Indians. . . .

SEPTEMBER 9

Mr. Adams drafted a long reply to it, which he submitted to father, who did not approve of it as it would only add fuel to the fire. He wrote his own reply, and for a wonder Mr. Adams approved of it. . . .

SEPTEMBER 15

There is a continual passing of notes and we still are no nearer a solution. Father is getting rather despondent, but only shows this to me, keeping a cheerful and hopeful demeanour before the others. The Indian Territory question is a great difficulty. Father says if the Indians were included in the peace—and to be in the same position as they were—our Government would break off negotiations. He was of opinion that it would be folly to break up negotiations on that account.

England could not now retreat from the position she had taken up with regard to the Indian Territory with dignity. . . .

SEPTEMBER 20

Father has drafted a reply to the British note. It is to this end, that they were willing to recognize the Indians as an independent nation; they refused to allow them to be included in the treaty in any manner, although they would be allowed their old rights and privileges. . . .

SEPTEMBER 26

The note was signed to-day and sent to Washington. Mr. Goulburn came to see father. He was most gracious and informed him he relied on his tact and good sense that he could treat with him; in fact, that he was not the least like an American. I do not know if father was pleased or not. He says the only Americans are the Red Indians. . . .

SEPTEMBER 30

It seems that Lord Liverpool wishes the offer of the Indian amnesty proffered to be accepted. Lord Bathurst is of the same mind. At last a slight ray of hope that there may be a happy termination.

OCTOBER 3

It is now thought advisable to call for a projet of a treaty. Mr. Clay has insisted upon drafting the American reply himself. . . .

OCTOBER 22

The British Commissioners sent a note yesterday; the pith of it is that the basis of uti possidetis be admitted and that they would treat on that basis alone. . . .

OCTOBER 24

I copied a short note to-day which was sent to the British Commissioners, drafted by father. It was to the effect that they would not treat on the basis of uti possidetis but only on the basis of status quo ante bellum, with regard to territory, also asking for a British projet. . . .

OCTOBER 29

We are all hard at work framing our projet. It is a most difficult task, as both Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay object to everything except what they suggest themselves. Father remains calm but firm and does all he can to keep peace. The articles on impressment, blockade, and indemnities are assigned to Mr. Adams; the boundaries and fisheries to father.

OCTOBER 30

Father to-day drew up an article re American rights to fish in British waters and British rights to navigate the Mississippi, which were confirmed by the treaty of 1783. Mr. Clay objected to them. A long and angry discussion ensued. One question was, what were the fisheries worth? The other the value of the navigation of the Mississippi. Father wishes to save the fisheries; Mr. Clay would not assent to anything. . . .

NOVEMBER 3

This drafting still goes on—endless discussions and violent arguments which I can see father thinks futile, but he never loses patience.

NOVEMBER 5

A vote to-day on father's proposed articles. Mr. Clay and Mr. Russell opposed it; father, Mr. Adams, and Mr. Bayard approved.

So the articles were inserted in the projet. We are getting a little more into shape. . . .

NOVEMBER 7

Father is doubtful if the questions of the fisheries and the Mississippi were not made permanent by the treaty of 1783.

NOVEMBER 10

The projet signed to-day and sent. The fisheries and Mississippi navigation left out.

NOVEMBER 12

We have to wait patiently for an answer, as all has to be submitted to the superiors in London.

NOVEMBER 26

The British contre-projet sent to-day; no allusions to the fishery question. A clause claiming free navigation of the Mississippi. . . .

NOVEMBER 28

A dreadful day. Angry disputes on the contre-projet. Father wishes the clause re the Mississippi accepted. Mr. Clay would not hear of it. Mr. Adams in opposition to Mr. Clay. Nothing arrived at. . . .

NOVEMBER 28

To-day father received a private dispatch from the Duke of Wellington. I have only just seen it. It is marked "Strictly confidential." It is couched in the most friendly terms, assuring father he has brought all his weight to bear to ensure peace. He goes on to say: "As I gather, Mr. Madison as well as Mr. Monroe gave you full power to act, without even consulting your colleagues on points you considered of importance. I now feel that peace is shortly in view. Mr. Goulburn has made grave errors and Lord Castlereagh has read him a sharp lesson."

Father burnt this dispatch and does not even know that I have recorded it. I wanted to copy it, and was doing so when he took it off the table and burned it. . . .

NOVEMBER 29

Father's proposition to accept the Mississippi clause after prolonged discussion was carried with a clause containing the taking, drying, and curing of fish, as secured by the former Treaty of Peace.

DECEMBER 7

An answer refusing to accept this proposition received to-day. More discussion, everlasting bickering, and matters delayed. Father can no longer support Mr. Adams; he has tried his patience too far.

DECEMBER 12

Another private note from the Duke of Wellington assuring father of his support. He says: "Pray do not take offence at what I say. In you I have the greatest confidence. I hear on all sides that your moderation and sense of justice, together with your good common sense, places you above all the other delegates, not excepting ours. The Emperor Alexander has assured me of this. He says we can place absolute reliance in your word. I have always had the greatest admiration for the country of your birth. You are a foreigner with all the traditions of one fighting for the peace and welfare of the country of your adoption."

Father, I think, was pleased. He is a foreigner and is proud of it. . . .

DECEMBER 22

An answer to-day. The fisheries and Mississippi clauses to be withdrawn and to be referred to further negotiations. It would be withdrawn so as not to be mentioned in the treaty.

Father now sees clearly the avowed wish of the English Government to make peace. . . .

DECEMBER 24

The treaty was signed to-day in the refectory of the monastery. Later on there was a solemn service in the cathedral; it was most impressive. We all attended as well as the Intendant, all the officers and the high officials of Ghent.

CHRISTMAS DAY

The British delegates very civilly asked us to dinner. The roast beef and plum pudding was from England, and everybody drank everybody else's health. The band played first "God Save the King," to the toast of the King, and "Yankee Doodle," to the toast of the President. Congratulations on all sides and a general atmosphere of serenity; it was a scene to be remembered.

God grant there may be always peace between the two nations. I never saw father so cheerful; he was in high spirits, and his witty conversation was much appreciated.

DECEMBER 27

We have now to wait for the ratification of the treaty. Indeed, I find it a great rest for me. I have copied all father's letters as well as all the important ones that he has received. Although I am only seventeen years of age, I feel much older. Mr. Adams has shown great kindness to me. At first I did not like him, but now will be sorry when we part.

JANUARY 1, 1815

I have enjoyed the last week very much. Ghent is en fête, dancing nearly every night. . . .

JANUARY 8

The ratification of the treaty completed to-day. A great banquet offered by the town of Ghent takes place to-night. Poor father is not looking forward to it. . . .

JANUARY 9

The banquet was very fine, lasting over five hours—speeches, nothing but speeches and toasts. Father said but a few words, but they were carefully chosen and seemed to go to the hearts of all. He spoke in French and ended in a most witty strain.

JANUARY 10

We are leaving now as soon as possible for Geneva. . . .

The following letters are of interest as a tribute to the part played by Albert Gallatin in the conclusion of the Treaty of Ghent.

HOTEL D'ALCANTARA, GHENT

Where the American commissioners lodged during the negotiations ending in the signing of the treaty of peace, Dec. 24, 1814

MADAME DE STAËL to ALBERT GALLATIN *

COPPET, SUISSE, PAYS DE VAUD,

Ce 31 Juillet, 1814

Vous m'avez permis de vous demander si vous avez quelque succès heureux à espérer de votre mission. Mandez-moi à cet égard, my dear Sir, tout ce qu'il vous est permis de me dire. Je suis inquiète d'un mot de Lord Castlereagh sur la durée de la guerre et je ne m'explique pas pourquoi il a dit qu'il était de l'intérêt de l'Angleterre que le Congrès de Vienne s'ouvrit plus tard. C'est vous, Amérique, qui m'intéresse avant tout maintenant, à part de mes affaires pécuniaires. Je vous trouve à présent les opprimés du parti de la liberté et je vois en vous la cause qui m'attachait à l'Angleterre il y a un an. On souhaite beaucoup de vous voir à Genève et vous y trouverez la République telle que vous l'avez laissée, seulement elle est moins libérale car la mode est ainsi maintenant en Suisse. Aussi les vieux aristocrates se relèvent et se remettent à combattre, en oubliant, comme les géants de l'Arioste, qu'ils sont déjà morts.

* MADAME DE STAËL to ALBERT GALLATIN

COPPET, SUISSE, PAYS DE VAUD,

July 31, 1814

You gave me permission to ask what hopes you have of the success of your mission. Let me know, my dear sir, all that you are permitted to tell me. I am disturbed by a word that Lord Castlereagh let drop about the duration of the war, and I cannot understand why he said that it was to England's interest that the opening of the Congress of Vienna should be postponed.

It is above all in you—America—that I am interested now apart from the question of my finances. I find you at the moment the oppressed champions of liberty, and it is in you that I find the same cause that attached me to England a year ago.

Every one is very anxious to see you at Geneva, and you will find the Republic there the same as you left it; only it is less liberal—for that is the fashion at the moment in Switzerland. The old aristocrats aux circonstances. Vous devez vous ennuyer à Gand et je voudrais profiter pour causer avec vous de tout le temps que vous y perdez. Avez-vous quelques commissions à faire à Genève et voulez-vous me donner le plaisir de vous y être utile en quelque chose? Mille compliments empressés.

N. DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN.

Vous savez que M. Sismondi vous a loué dans son discours à St. Pierre.

MADAME DE STAËL to ALBERT GALLATIN *

PARIS, RUE DE GRENELLE ST. GERMAIN, No. 105
30 Septembre, 1814

Je vous ai écrit de Coppet, my dear Sir, et je n'ai point eu de réponse. Je crains que ma lettre ne vous too are rising, and entering the arena again, forgetting like Ariosto's giants that they are already dead. I hope Reason will triumph, and to one who knows you, she bears a quality so noble and high-minded that her strength appears supreme. Strive for peace, nevertheless, and be guided by circumstances. You must be wearied at Ghent, and I would fain have the opportunity of passing in converse with you all the time that you are losing there. Have you any commissions that you wish executed at Geneva? If so, pray give me the pleasure of doing you some service.

A thousand compliments.

N. DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN.

You have doubtless heard that M. Sismondi sang your praises in his speech at St. Pierre.

* MADAME DE STAËL to ALBERT GALLATIN

PARIS, RUE DE GRENELLE ST. GERMAIN, 105,
September 30.

I wrote to you from Coppet, my dear Sir, and I have not had any answer from you. I fear my letter has never reached you. Will you it pas parvenue. Soyez assez bon pour me dire ce que vous pouvez me dire sur la vente de mes fonds en Amérique. Je suis si inquiète que l'idée me venait d'envoyer mon fils en Amérique pour tirer ma fortune de là. Songez qu'elle y est presque toute entière, c'est à dire que j'y ai quinze cents mille francs, soit en terres soit en fonds publiques, soit chez les banquiers. Soyez aussi assez bon pour me dire si vous restez à Gand. Mon voyage en allant en Angleterre pourrait passer par chez vous pour me donner mes nouvelles de Paris.

Enfin je vous prie de m'accorder quelques lignes sur tout ce qui m'intéresse. Vous pouvez compter sur ma discrétion et sur ma reconnaissance, et je mérite peut-être quelque bienveillance par mes efforts pour vous servir.

Lord Wellington prétend que je ne le vois jamais sans prêcher sur l'Amérique. Vous savez de quelle haute considération je suis pénétrée pour votre esprit et votre caractère. Mille compliments.

N. DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN.

good enough to tell me all you can about the sale of my property in America. I am so anxious that I thought of sending my son to America to withdraw my fortune from that country. Remember that nearly the whole of it is there, that is to say some fifteen hundred thousand francs, in land and public funds or at my bankers.

Be good enough also to tell me if you remain at Ghent. My son would go to see you on his way to England and give you my news from Paris. Lastly, I beg of you to send me a few lines on anything that interests me; you can count on my discretion and gratitude—and deserve perhaps some kindness for the efforts I have made to serve it.

Lord Wellington pretends that I never see him without preaching to him on the subject of America.

I need not tell you how much I admire your wit and your character. Thousand compliments.

N. DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN.

ALBERT GALLATIN to MADAME DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN*

GAND, 4 Octobre, 1814

CE n'est que hier, my dear Madam, que j'ai reçu votre lettre du 23 Septembre; celle que vous m'aviez fait le plaisir de m'écrire de Coppet m'était bien parvenue; mais malgré la parfaite confiance que vous m'avez inspirée, il était de mon devoir de ne rien laisser transpirer de nos négociations; et j'espérais tous les jours pouvoir vous annoncer le lendemain quelque chose de positive. Nous sommes toujours dans le même état d'incertitude, mais il me paraît impossible que cela puisse durer longtemps, et je vous promets que vous recevrez la première instruite du résultat. Malgré les fâcheux auspices sous lesquels nous avons commencé à traiter, je n'avais point perdu l'espérance de pouvoir réussir. Il faut cependant convenir que ce qui s'est passé à la prise de Washington peut faire naître de nouveaux obstacles à la paix. Une incursion momentanée et la destruction d'un Arsenal et d'une frégate ne sont qu'une bagatelle; mais faire sauter ou brûler les palais du Congrès et du Président, et les bureaux des différents départements c'est un acte de Vandalisme dont

* LETTER OF ALBERT GALLATIN to MADAME DE STAËL-HOLSTEIN

GHENT, October 4, 1814.

It was only yesterday, my dear Madam, that I received your letter of September 30. The one that you were kind enough to write from Coppet reached me safely. But in spite of the perfect confidence with which you inspire me it was my duty not to let anything transpire of our negotiations, and I had hopes every day that on the morrow I should have some definite news to give to you. We are always in the same state of uncertainty, but it seems to me impossible that this can continue for long, and I promise you that you shall be the first to hear of the result. Despite the unpropitious auspices under which we began to treat, I have never lost hope that we shall succeed in the end. It must however be admitted that what took place at the capture of Washington may bring forth further obstacles in the way la guerre de vingt ans en Europe depuis les frontières de la Russie jusqu'à Paris et de celles du Danemarck jusqu'à Naples, n'offre aucun exemple, et qui doit nécessairement exaspérer les esprits. Est-ce parceque à l'exception de quelques cathédrales, l'Angleterre n'avait aucun édifice public qui pût leur être comparé? Ou serait-ce pour consoler la populace de la cité de Londres de ce que Paris n'a été ni pillé ni brûlé?

Tout en vous disant cela, je ne me plains point de la conduite des Anglais, qui, si la guerre continue, loin de nous nuire n'aura servi qu'à unir et animer la nation. Sous ce point de vue, la manière dont on nous fait la guerre doit pleinement rassurer ceux qui avaient des craintes mal fondées sur la permanence de notre union et de notre Gouvernement Fédératif. Et il n'y a qu'une dissolution totale qui puisse renverser nos finances et nous faire manquer à nos engagements.

Je comprends cependant fort bien que lorsqu'on n'est pas Americain, l'on désirerait dans ce moment avoir sa fortune ailleurs que dans ce pays là; je puis avoir des préjuges trop favorables et ne voudrais aucunement vous induire en erreur.

Mais il me semble que vendre vos fonds à 15 ou 20 of peace. A sudden raid and the destruction of an Arsenal and a frigate are a mere trifle, but to blow up and burn the House of Congress and the President's Palace, and the offices of the various departments, is an act of vandalism to which the Twenty Years' War in Europe, a war that extended from the Russian frontier to Paris, and from Denmark to Naples, cannot offer a parallel, and which must necessarily embitter the temper. Was it because, with the possible exception of a few cathedrals, England has not a single building that can compare with them, or was it to console the populace of the city of London for the fact that Paris was neither sacked nor burnt?

All the same I am not complaining at all of the conduct of the English, which, far from hurting us, will, if the war continues, only serve to unite and to animate our country. From this point of view their manner of conducting the war must amply reassure all who cherished groundless fears for the permanence of our Union and our Federal Government. And nothing short of a total rupture can upset our finances and make us fail in our engagements. Notwithstanding pour cent de perte en serait un sacrifice inutile. Ils tomberont probablement encore plus si la guerre continue, mais les intérêts seront toujours fidèlement payés et le capital sera au pair six mois après la paix. Nous nous sommes tirés d'une bien plus mauvaise situation. A la fin de la guerre de l'indépendance nous n'avions ni finances ni Gouvernement; notre population ne s'élevait qu'à environ trois millions et demi, la nation était extrêmement pauvre, la dette publique était presque égale à ce qu'elle est actuellement; les fonds perdaient de 80 à 85 pour cent. Nous n'avons cependant pas fait faillite; nous n'avons pas réduit la dette à un tiers par un trait de plume; avec de l'économie et surtout de la probité, nous avons fait face à tout, remis tout au pair, et pendant les dix années qui avaient précédé la guerre actuelle nous avons payé la moitié du capital de notre ancienne dette.

Au milieu de toutes nos factions, n'importe quel parti ait gouverné, le même esprit les a toujours animés à cet égard. Le même esprit regne encore; nous sommes très

I understand that one who is not an American would prefer to have his fortune at the present moment elsewhere than in that country; I may myself be somewhat prejudiced and under no circumstances would I wish to mislead you. But it is my personal opinion that to sell your investments at a loss of 15 to 20 per cent. would be a useless sacrifice. They will probably fall still further if the war continues, but the interest will always be faithfully paid and the capital will be back at par six months after peace is made. We extricated ourselves from a worse position than the present. At the end of the War of Independence we had neither money nor government; our population did not amount to more than three and a half millions, the country was extremely poor, the national debt was nearly as large as it is at present, and the Funds fell 80 to 85 per cent. Nevertheless we did not go bankrupt, we did not by a stroke of the pen reduce our debt to a third. By economy and, above all, by honesty, we met every obligation, restored all to par value, and in the course of the ten years that preceded the present war paid off half of the capital of our original debt.

In the midst of all our party differences, no matter which party was in power, the same spirit as regards finance has always animated our ouvert les lèvres que je fus rassuré, et en moins de cinq minutes je me sentis auprès de vous comme avec une amie de vingt ans. Je n'aurais fait que vous admirer, mais votre bonté égale vos talents et c'est pour cela que je vous aime. Agréez-en, je vous prie, l'assurance et soyez sure du plaisir que me procurerait l'occasion de pouvoir vous être bon à quelque chose.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT to ALBERT GALLATIN

Je n'ai pas été assez heureux pour vous trouver ce matin, mon illustre ami. J'aurais bien désiré cependant vous parler de mon attachement constant et tendre, de mon vif intérêt pour la paix que vous avez eu la gloire de conclure dans des circonstances difficiles. J'aurais voulu vous féliciter sur cette belle et noble défense de la Nouvelle-Orléans qui fera respecter les armées de la Liberté. Comme les flottes qui voguent sous votre pavillon se sont couvertes de gloire depuis longtemps! Que dans ces temps malheureux mes yeux se fixent avec attendrissement sur ces contrées qui seront bientôt le centre de la civilisation humaine! Je ferais d'autres tentatives pour vous trouver et recommander de nouveau Mr. Warden, mon ami et celui de Messrs. Berthollet, Thenard, Gay Lussac, et de tout ce qui aime les sciences. Je ne puis croire qu'un homme aussi instruit, aussi doux, aussi honnête, aussi attaché aux Etats-Unis, à M. Jefferson et aux doctrines vertueuses puisse être rejeté par votre gouvernement. Je supplie Madame Gallatin d'agréer l'hommage de mon respectueux devouement.

before my confidence returned, and after five minutes in your company I felt that I had been your friend for twenty years. My admiration was yours in any case. But finding your kindness is only equalled by your talents, I cannot but love you. Accept, I pray you, my assurance of this, and believe me when I say that it will always be a pleasure to me to serve you in any way within my power.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

Quel contraste entre cette époque et celle où vous me vites à Londres ennuyé des "Magnanimous Souverains et de la croisade des héros!" *

HUMBOLDT.

QUAI MALAQUAIS, No. 3.

Jeudi.

*ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT to ALBERT GALLATIN

I HAD not the pleasure of finding you this morning, my noble friend. Nevertheless I would fain have spoken with you of my constant and sincere attachment and of my keen interest in the peace which you have had the honour to conclude under the most difficult circumstances.

I would have liked to congratulate you on your fine and courageous defence of New Orleans, which will gain respect for the armies of liberty. The fleets which sail under your Flag have indeed for long covered themselves with glory. How tenderly in these unhappy times my eyes gaze on the countries so soon to be the centre of the civilization of the world. I would make other attempts to find you and to recommend again to your notice Mr. Warden, my friend and the friend of Messieurs Berthollet, Thenard and Gay Lussac, as indeed he is of every friend of learning. I cannot believe that a man so full of learning, so gentle and so honourable, so firm a friend of the United States, of Mr. Jefferson and his virtuous doctrines, can be rejected by your Government.

I entreat Madame Gallatin to accept the expression of my respectful homage and devotion.

What a contrast this period presents to the time when you saw me in London, weary of the Magnanimous Sovereigns and the Heroes' Crusade.

HUMBOLDT.

3 QUAI MALAQUAIS,

Thursday.

PART II

FROM THE CONCLUSION OF THE TREATY OF GHENT TO THE SIGNATURE OF THE TREATY OF COMMERCE

JANUARY—JULY 1815

JANUARY 20, 1815: GENEVA

We arrived here to-day. Father was very excited, as it was his first visit to his native land after so many years absence.

We went direct to the Gallatin House. The entrance is in the Cité, a steep narrow lane paved with small round cobble-stones. The house faces on the Rue de la Corratie. It is very fine, and belongs to Monsieur Naville, who married the daughter and heiress of Count Paul Michael de Gallatin, who was the head of the family. Our coat-of-arms in stone used to be high up over the door, but during the Revolution some miscreants destroyed it, leaving only the two lions the supporters.

JANUARY 21

Crowds of visitors all day to welcome father. Madame de Staël came from Coppet. She is not handsome, but such a great charm of manner. She was oddly dressed, seeming to have one or two skirts on top of the other, a great pelisse of green cloth lined with sable, on her head a high green calèche. She invited both father and myself to pay her a visit at Coppet. She is not tall, rather fat, and has coarse features but splendid eyes.

JANUARY 22

This morning the Syndics came in a body to greet father and to congratulate him on the successful termination of the Peace with England. Then Monsieur Sismondi* made a discours full of laudation of father, much to the latter's annoyance. After they withdrew Benjamin Constant was announced; he rushed up to father, seized him in his arms, and kissed him on both cheeks. There was some excuse for him as he is a relation of ours.

Large dinner of forty at 3 o'clock, nearly all relatives—Navilles, Saladins, Sellons, Sarrasins, Humberts, Diodatis, de Budés, Pictets, Lullins, &c. &c. I was much struck with their great simplicity and dignity of manner; it was all a revelation to me. The ladies were very plainly dressed with hardly any jewels. So odd, they never change your knife and fork after the fish is served, but have little silver rests by each plate for them. The dinner lasted two hours and a half.

After escorting the ladies to the drawing-room—where all the women kissed their hostess, then kissed each other, and we men kissed their hands. All this was done in a most solemn and dignified manner—then our host, knowing father's habit, conducted him with some of the other guests to the library to smoke.

Father smokes regularly eleven strong cigars a day. After about an hour we adjourned to the large gallery. All the ladies were seated stiffly around the room. Only one person talked at a time. It is called a salon. It was interesting at first, but after three hours of it I wished myself in Paris. At 9 o'clock supper was announced. . . .

JANUARY 23

All day paying visits; a quiet evening.

JANUARY 24

We go on a tour of visits, starting on the 26th. I am in love with Geneva, it is so beautiful although it is winter;

* J. C. L. Sismondi, born 1773, died 1842, a Genevan and famous they tell me I must see it in summer. A large supper to-night—other members of our family and relations, together with Monsieur de Lavalette and Monsieur Bonstetten. . . .

JANUARY 25

A very tiring day, paying visits in the morning. From 5 till 7 o'clock one deputation followed the other to greet father. I think he was bored; I know I was. . . .

JANUARY 26

We started at 10 o'clock and arrived at Château de Rozay, near Rolle. My grandmother was a Mlle Rolaz du Rozay. The château is small with turrets, very old and very comfortable. My two du Rozay cousins, who are about my age, are immensely tall and broad in proportion, one being 6 ft. 4 in., the other an inch taller. It seems that they are always hunting chamois in the mountains. I feel like a dwarf next to them. A portrait of my grandmother as a girl, not pretty; but one of her sisters who married a Prussian, Count Doenhoff, is quite lovely; she was Mistress of the Robes to the Queen of Prussia and a famous beauty. . . .

JANUARY 28: CHATEAU DE ROZAY

We leave here to-morrow and go to the Château d'Allaman.

JANUARY 29: ALLAMAN

Allaman, on the Lake Lemman, belongs to Count Sellon (his mother was a Gallatin). A beautiful castle, filled with Gobelin tapestry and furniture; one room all pink tapestry. We dined in the chapel—60 ft. long and 30 ft. wide, stone floor. . . .

JANUARY 30

The family are charming—four daughters, all young.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1815

he youngest is named Hortense. The Queen Hortense* as her godmother. The latter has stopped for weeks at Malman. They have an authentic ghost here, not in the house but in the park; I hope to see it before I leave. It is in the form of a monk reading a book. He is to be seen in one of the alleys of the wood approaching; when you get quite close he vanishes. All the family have seen it, as well as hundreds of others. Monsieur de Sellon has stationed men with bill-hooks at various places to cut down branches, as he thinks it but an optical illusion. . . .

JANUARY 31

I saw the ghost at 12.30 to-day. It is certainly extraordinary. They fired point-blank at it without any effect. . . .

FEBRUARY 1

I was too tired to write last night. A beautiful day, bright sunshine. We have been skating all day. Our visit terminates to-morrow. To-night a large supper in honour of Joseph Bonaparte,† the ex-King of Spain, the eldest brother of Napoleon. He lives at Prangins on the lake. Monsieur de Sellon had a letter to-day from the Queen Hortense—he read parts of it aloud to us. Evidently she is in great trouble.

FEBRUARY 2

Joseph Bonaparte is handsome—acts as if he were still King of Spain. He arrived with a large suite. We were presented to him by the Count de Sellon before supper. He had a long conversation with father on the state of Europe. He is very rich. He spoke with much feeling of Napoleon. He married Julie Clary, the daughter of a Marseilles tallow-chandler; she had some money. Father does not like the Bonapartes or their entourage—says Joseph Bonaparte shows his middle-class bringing up both in speech and movements, that Napoleon is better where he is. Although father is representing a republic and believes in republics, he has a strong affection for the House of Bourbon. We drove with four horses and postillions to the Château de Veufflans, above Lausanne. At the bottom of the hill two more horses were added, sent by Monsieur de Senarclan. The names are so funny. Veufflans is superb, built by the Reine Berthe in 1000. It is in bad repair; it would cost over a million francs to restore it. After we arrived a deputation presented an address to father from Lausanne in the name of the Canton de Vaud. . . .

* Hortense de Beauharnais, daughter of the Empress Joséphine by her first husband, married Louis Bonaparte January 3, 1802, was Queen of Holland and mother of Napoleon III.

† Joseph, the eldest brother of Napoleon, born 1768, died 1844, was King of Naples and King of Spain.

FEBRUARY 3: VEUFFLANS

Went to-day to the Château de Chillon, near Vevey. It is most interesting; such a wonderful position, built right into the lake. It belonged to the Duke of Savoy. Another dinner lasting two hours, some music, which was a relief, then talk, talk, talk, and the usual trays passed round, one closely following the other. I was glad to get to bed. . . .

FEBRUARY 4

We go to-morrow to Sergy, which belongs to Monsieur Pictet, another relation. . . .

FEBRUARY 5

A beautiful house. Snowing hard all day. A very large party but of little interest. . . .

FEBRUARY 6

We left here this morning in a most comfortable sleigh for Coppet; we had three relays of horses, the last sent dinner at her house in Geneva, to which Madame Bonaparte was invited. Arriving very late, she delayed serving the dinner for over half an hour. On one side of her was a Mr. Dundas, a great gourmand, who was much put out at having to wait. After the soup had been served he turned to Madame Bonaparte and asked her if she had read the book of Captain Basil Hall on America. She replied in the affirmative. "Well, madame, did you notice that Hall said all Americans are vulgarians?" "Quite true," calmly answered Madame Bonaparte, "I am not in the least surprised. If the Americans had been the descendants of the Indians or the Esquimaux there might have been some reason to be astonished, but as they are the direct descendants of the English it is perfectly natural that they should be vulgarians." After this Mr. Dundas did not open his mouth again and left at the first opportunity.

This afternoon we went out in Russian sledges, six of them.

The Marquis of Huntly arrived, and we dined at 5 o'clock. A most interesting evening—our hostess most brilliant. She told us many episodes of the Revolution and the part she had taken in it: how she had helped so many of her friends to escape, having armed herself with passports of different nations; how Napoleon had persecuted her. She also spoke most feelingly of her father with tears in her eyes; it seems she adored him.

FEBRUARY 8: COPPET

The Marquis of Huntly* gave father a copy of a letter given to him by Mr. Barry. It is an account of an interview with Napoleon at Elba—most interesting. He first read it aloud. Madame de Staël could hardly contain herself and continually interrupted, exclaiming, "Cet animal; n devrait lui tordre le cou." Lord Huntly says that one of the reasons she hates Bonaparte so heartily is, when she once asked him whom he considered the greatest women in history he replied, "The women who had the most children." Madame de Staël had only two.

* Marquis of Huntly, born 1743, died 1827, afterward Duke of Gordon. At the command of Louis XV he opened the ball at Versailles with the Dauphiness, 1770, and in 1826, at the age of eighty-four, danced with Madame de France, daughter of the Duc de Berri.

COLONEL BARRY'S LETTER to THE MARQUIS OF HUNTLY

Mr. Douglas* dined with Colonel Barry yesterday. He had just come from the Island of Elba, where he had an audience of nearly two hours with Bonaparte. His account of him is as nearly as follows:

On his arrival in the island he went to General Bertrand (who is a sort of chamberlain) to state that he was a member of the English Parliament and to request permission to pay his respects to the Emperor. General Bertrand was ill, but he received a very civil answer from General Rouet in the affirmative. He was accordingly introduced, and was received with great courtesy. Bonaparte asked several questions about his journey, and then, to the surprise of Mr. D., began to talk in the most unreserved manner of the state of affairs in Europe. He said that he lamented that the present Government had not given up the slave trade—that had he remained in power he would have done so, as it was a system of brigandage by which France was not benefited. He had proposed a plan for the settlement of St. Domingue, to give up the centre of the island to the blacks and to establish factories upon the coast. That he had conceived it would be attended with advantage to allow polygamy amongst the blacks, but upon consulting a certain bishop, un bon homme, cet Evêque m'a dit: c'est contraire à la religion Chrétienne. He abused the Emperor Alexander with great violence, said he was 'faux et un fat.'

* Mr. Douglas was an M.P., and a violent anti-Bonapartist.

Vous ne pouvez pas avoir une idée de la fausseté de cet homme. We were right, he said, in supposing that there had been secret articles in the treaty of Tilsit. Alexander was bound by them to go to war with England. 'Cela entra dans mon système!' He said the Bourbons would repent it if they gave up Belgique.

That he would have given up anything else, but that he knew the French people would not allow him to remain on the throne except as a conqueror. France would not bear to be confined to her ancient limits. He compared her to air compressed within too small a compass, the explosion of which was like thunder. 'Malheur aux Bourbons si jamais ils font la paix sans conserver aucune conquête; il y'a dans la France une jeunesse bouillante de 100,000 hommes accoutumés au métier de la guerre.' He was here evidently carried away by his subject and, suddenly recollecting himself, said: 'Mais ce n'est pas mon affaire—je suis mort.'

In the course of conversation Prince Metternich was mentioned, and Mr. D. said, 'C'est un bon politique.' Bonaparte answered: 'Non, c'est un homme très aimable et qui parle très bien en compagnie, mais qui ment toujours; on peut mentir une fois, deux fois, trois fois, mais on ne peut pas mentir toujours, ce n'est pas selon ma politique.' England was, he said, at the height of her power and glory, but that we must remember that when nations were arrived at that point it was said they were near a decline. That the Continental Powers were jealous of our maritime rights and in time of peace would be as much so as they had been of his territorial acquisitions.

He laughed and joked a great deal about the Pope and the tricks he had played to get him in his power, constantly repeating, 'Moi qui suis le meilleur Catholique du monde; il n'y a pas dans le monde un meilleur Catholique que moi,' and sentiments of this sort. He said he understood the world had expected that he would have put a pistol to his head, but no, he had been born a soldier; had found the "Throne de France" vacant, circumstances had placed him on it, that he had remained there fourteen years, and had been obliged to descend from it. Having borne this 'ce serait un lâche qui ne pourrait pas soutenir l'existence.' He was sorry, he said, at the close of the last campaign, when he had advanced to Ville Juis, he had not pushed on to Paris. He had 40,000 of his guards with him who would have shed the last drop of blood for him, and he thinks his presence would have raised the people to defend the town—he wanted so much to do so but was dissuaded by his generals. He complained bitterly of Marmont. 'Could you have believed it that a man to whom I have actually given bread would have deserted me in that manner?' he said; that we had not done justice to the Americans; that there had never been any treaty between him and Madison, and they had held as high language to him as they had done to us. Mr. D. had crossed the Alps by the passage of the Simplon, one of the most splendid works of Bonaparte's reign; hearing it, he made many inquiries about the state of the road, and appeared minutely acquainted with it and interested on the subject. This is almost all I can recollect, nearly the whole of what Mr. D. related to us. He says Bonaparte is in excellent health—not too fat, as he had been told; very dirty and vulgar in his manner of speaking and extremely poor.

The French Government have not paid him his pension, and in consequence he has been obliged to reduce his household one-half. He had 1200 troops in his pay, mostly veterans who had followed his fortunes from the Imperial Guards. Mr. D. says his apparent want of feeling is beyond anything he could have conceived. He could not learn anything on the subject of the reports that he was to leave Elba. Some time ago he landed in one of the most barren parts of t a messenger was dispatched to Bonaparte; he came down unattended by any servant and received a lady, whom he conducted to a country house of his. She remained there two days, at the end of which time he reconducted her in the same manner. They embraced often at parting. The Elbans think it was Marie Louise, but it is generally supposed to have been a Polish lady to whom he was attached.

Mr. Douglas in the course of conversation two or three times mentioned the Empress, whom he had seen in Switzerland, but Bonaparte took no notice of it and appeared anxious to avoid the subject."

NOTE ON ORIGINAL BY ALBERT GALLATIN

Mr. Douglas's conversation with Bonaparte given to me at Geneva in February, 1815, by the Marquis of Huntly, since Duke of Gordon. . . .

A. G.

Diary continued:

FEBRUARY 8

After dinner Albertine de Staël sang some charming chansonnettes, accompanying herself on a spinet. All the chairs were put in a circle and Madame de Staël held forth. She read some letters of Louis XVIII when he was in England. She also told us that it was a fact that the Duc de Berri had married in London the daughter of an English clergyman and had children. Then Monsieur Bonstetten gave a little discourse on Voltaire and Byron, followed by Monsieur Sigismonde. Then father gave a most amusing account of his early life in America and of his first meeting with General Washington in a log-cabin. I saw Madame de S. taking notes on her tablets.

FEBRUARY 9: COPPET

This morning Lord Huntly described the splendours of the ball at Versailles for the marriage of the Dauphin Louis XVI; that the King sent for him and commanded him to open the ball with Dauphine "Marie Antoinette."

Porte et gradins à gauche.

CARD TO THE BALL GIVEN AT THE MARRIAGE OF THE DAUPHIN, FATHER OF LOUIS XVI

de Clermont-Tonnerre (she was née de Sellon), Count and Countess Cavour, Comtesse de Boigne, and a host of others. We dined thirty. At 8 o'clock more arrivals: Prince Demidoff in a superb sleigh with eight horses harnessed in Russian fashion; he brought the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Princess Patiomkin, Princess Galitzin, and Madame Bonaparte. The Grand Duke led in Madame Bonaparte. She is quite beautiful still, was wonderfully dressed, and covered in fine jewels. She kissed me on both cheeks, which made me very shy, but she has known me since I was a child.

At 9 o'clock the comedy was played in the long gallery. It was most witty. Madame de Staël was in white and gold draperies, with a turban with eight or ten white feathers. She really looked handsome. She always has a small branch of laurel in her hand. At the end of the performance, with a curtsy she threw it to father—just the thing to annoy him. Madame Bonaparte gave me a brooch of turquoise for my choker. Supper was served at 10.30, and the guests did not leave until after 1.30 A.M. We leave at 2 o'clock for Sacconex (the de Budés). I watched father carefully and tried to do exactly as he did. All the ladies curtsied down to the ground to H.R.H.; some of the older ones I thought would never get up again. Why will fat old ladies wear such low waists? I never kissed so many hands in my life, and my neck is quite stiff with bowing.

FEBRUARY 10

We left Coppet after déjeuner. Prince Demidoff kindly offered to take us with him, as he was going back to Geneva and Sacconex is on his way. His sleigh is superb; all the rugs are of the finest Russian sable. All assembled in the hall to bid us farewell. Madame de Staël kissed me on both cheeks and gave me a beautifully bound copy of "Corinne" with the dedication "A Cupidon de la part de l'auteur." I really must look a baby. I will never forget my visit to Coppet. We had eight horses harnessed Russian fashion, three relays. Galloped all the way. . . .

FEBRUARY 11: SACCONEX

This is a lovely house and all are so kind. M. de Budé is a cousin of father's. There are two sons—Jules, the younger, full of life. We have been skating. . . .

A large dinner, rather dull. . . .

For three mortal hours in the drawing-room footmen passed tray after tray of sirops, wine cakes, &c. &c. People here never seem to stop eating.

Byron called Madame de Staël "old Mother Stale," but nevertheless he said of her "she is vain, but who has better right to be." . . .

FEBRUARY 13: GENEVA

We returned here to-day and are stopping at the Naville's. Father learned to-day that at one time it was the intention of the British Government to send the Duke of Wellington to America, during the Ghent negotiations, to terminate the war. It seems he refused to go, giving his reason that he could not be spared, and at the same time expressing his displeasure at the way Lords Castle-reagh, Liverpool, and Bathurst were acting. It seems it was mainly due to him that the English made the concessions they did and brought the matter to a speedy termination. . . .

FEBRUARY 14

Father takes me alone with him to-morrow to spend the day at Ferney. He calls it a pilgrimage. He was often taken to see Voltaire by his grandmother when very young. This afternoon a deputation of Americans residing in Geneva and the Canton de Vaud presented father with an address enclosed in a beautiful casket of enamel. We dined quietly en famille.

FEBRUARY 15

Such an interesting day. Sitting in Voltaire's favourite chair at Ferney, I am writing this. We left Geneva early, arriving here for déjeuner at 11.30. The owners of Ferney are away, but left orders we were to be entertained. The house is not large, but well situated and comfortable. During déjeuner father told me how he used to be brought by his grandmother to Ferney; that he often dined at the tables we were sitting at with the friends of Voltaire—the Marquis de Condorcet,* who wrote the letters of Junius to William Pitt (he was arrested in April 1794 and found dead in his cell at Bourg la Reine on April 8, poisoned by opium, which he always carried in a ring, so cheating the guillotine); the Abbé Galiani, the great wit and raconteur, whose indecent stories even Madame Necker forgave (it was he who said the death of Marie Theresa was "like an ink-bottle spilt on the map of Europe"); Diderot the atheist, and Grimm. He said, "I feel them hovering around us now, and can nearly hear their voices." Then he told me of visits when Voltaire read some new play aloud, or rehearsed with the Duc de Villar and Madame Gallatin (his grandmother)—plays that were acted both at Ferney and Pregny; in fact, he himself had taken the rôle of a negro boy in Oriental dress when he was twelve years old. One Sunday Voltaire took him into the garden and, pointing to the heavens, said, "That is the dome made by the great God—not the God created by man." There was a splendid sunset, and as the sun sank behind the Vosges Mountains he said: "Can anything be grander than that?—never to be imitated."—"When I was older he impressed upon me always to be charitable in thought and action, to benefit my fellow-creatures as much as was within my power, always to speak the truth, and never to be afraid to give my opinion." The last time father saw him he was ill; it was in 1778, the year before he died. He kissed father on both cheeks and said, "Enfin Dieu m'appelle—mais quel Dieu. Je n'en sais rien." Madame de la Vilette, his niece, gave father a small bust of her uncle, which I now have. . . .

* Jean Antoine Nicolas de Caritat, Marquis de Condorcet, born 1743, died 1794.

Before leaving Ferney I picked some myrtle-leaves and pensées to send to my mother. . . .

After dining at 4 o'clock we returned to Geneva—a day never to be forgotten. I am afraid my description is very poor.

Father is giving sittings to Madame Meunier Romilly for a portrait for Geneva. . . .

FEBRUARY 16

To-day I visited St. Pierre, the cathedral, also the temple, and saw the tablet to the victories of the Escalade in 1602. There was a Louis Gallatin killed. . . .

FEBRUARY 17

We went to Pregny, where father was born. This house, together with all my father's property, was sold by his trustees during the Revolution at great sacrifice. They thought they were acting wisely in such troubled times.

I went to see father's portrait. She will only have time to paint the head and hands, the remainder from a model. It looks too old to me.

FEBRUARY 18

We paid a visit to Madame Récamier, who is passing through Geneva. She is beautiful, but I could not see great intelligence in her face; great charm of manner.

We also called on Madame Patterson Bonaparte. She was very witty and made father laugh. She told us how she first met her husband, Jerome Bonaparte. He had gone to America in command of a ship, arriving at Baltimore. He was invited to dine with an old Frenchman, the Marquis de Poléon, who had escaped with his family from St. Domingo during the massacre on that island; two of his children with their nurses were killed. On account of the troubled state of France, he had thought it wiser to go to America. All the beauties of Baltimore were invited to the dinner—the Catons,* &c. &c. She was looking out of the window overlooking the drive with Monsieur de Poléon's eldest daughter. She continued: "We saw two young men approaching the house. Mlle Pascault exclaimed, pointing to the taller one, 'That man will be my husband.' I answered, 'Very well, I will marry the other one.' Strangely enough, we both did as we had said. Henrietta Pascault married Reubell, son of one of the three directors, and I married Jerome Bonaparte"; adding, "Had I but waited, with my beauty and wit I would have married an English duke, instead of which I married a Corsican blackguard."

We leave to-morrow, much to father's regret. He feels it is his duty to go to England as soon as possible, as there is so much to discuss and settle. This has been his holiday. A large supper of fifty to-night, nearly all relations. I liked them, austere as they were, as they are so fond of father and proud of him.

FEBRUARY 19: BELGARDE

We left at 8 o'clock this morning. Prince Demidoff sent his sleigh and had arranged for four relays of horses. Even at that early hour most of our relations came to wish us "God-speed." Father was touched, I could see it by his eyes. This is our first halting-place. After all, Madame Meunier had only time to paint the head and one hand, which is holding a roll of paper, symbolic of the treaty.

* The three beautiful Miss Catons. One married the Duke of Leeds. Another the Marquis of Wellesley, brother of the Duke of Wellington, and the third Lord Stratford.

FEBRUARY 20: BELGARDE

I got up early and went to see the "Bouche du Rhone." The river disappears for over three miles under stone. . . .

FEBRUARY 23: MACON

We arrived here late last night. A charming old town. It is the great wine country. . . .

FEBRUARY 25: DIJON

Not very interesting. Still the wine country. . . .

FEBRUARY 28: FONTAINEBLEAU

What a beautiful place! We are lodged in an inn opposite the palace gates. I went over the château; it is full of interest, of Henry II, Diane de Poitiers, &c. &c. I was shown the apartment that Napoleon gave to the Pope when he made him prisoner. The Pope would not allow a divorce between King Jerome and his wife; that was one of the reasons he brought him to Fontainebleau, as he himself wanted to divorce Josephine. . . .

MARCH 1: PARIS

We started early and arrived for breakfast at Vaux Praslin, a magnificent palace belonging to the Duc de Choiseul. It was built by Fouquet, Marquis de Belle-Isle, Superintendent of Finances to Louis XIV. He entertained the King there in great splendour. . . . The Duc received us most kindly. He is a connexion through the Birons and Marmiers. I never saw such wonderful furniture, tapestries, pictures, &c. &c. The library superb; all the books bound in red morocco with coat-of-arms in gold. Only the family and a nice homely déjeuner. Then father returned with the Duc to the library to smoke and to get some political information from him. We left at 3 o'clock for Paris and arrived late. . . .

Oh, beautiful Paris! I am so glad to get back. . . .

MARCH 2: PARIS

The Duc de Choiseul Praslin called to-day and told father his Majesty wished for an interview unofficial. It is a delicate matter, as father feels, until he has been to London, that his mouth is closed. . . .

We are lodged in a quiet little hotel in the Rue de Monsieur. Father will not spend any money unnecessarily as his expenses are paid by his Government. His strong idea is that the representative of a republic should not make any show or be ostentatious, saying, "It is only the vulgar nouveaux riches that do that." . . .

MARCH 3, 1815

We were received privately this morning by the King. Only the Duchesse d'Angoulême was present. She looked very sad.

The King moved to the embrasure of a window, motioning to father to follow him; they remained in conversation for a quarter of an hour. Amongst other things his Majesty intimated a wish that father would be sent as Minister to Paris, adding, "You must not forget that your family belonged to France before you belonged to America." The Duchess talked to me most graciously, asked me about my mother, and said, "You are too young to begin political life." I assured her I was seventeen. She exclaimed, "Mais c'est un bébé." . . .

Monsieur David, the great artist, has requested father to allow me to pose to him for Cupid. Father has consented, and I sit to-morrow. . . .

MARCH 4, 1815

A day of great excitement. News has reached Paris that Napoleon had made his escape from Elba and was at a little village called Cannes; that he had been received with acclamation.

The King and Royal Family went to the opera and had a great reception. . . .

"CUPID AND PSYCHE," BY DAVID, FOR WHICH JAMES GALLATIN, ET. SIXTEEN, POSED AS CUPID

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1815

MARCH 5

Great consternation. Courier after courier arriving; all news suppressed. . . .

MARCH 6, 1815

No news further than we had yesterday. They say the King is very calm. I saw him driving in state to-day. . . . That for my portrait—that is, like a model, I had to expose nude. . . .

MARCH 10

The Emperor is marching on Paris, gathering men on his way. Some say he has already one hundred thousand. . . .

MARCH 11

All sorts of wild reports: one does not know what to believe. . . .

MARCH 14

The Emperor was at Grenoble on the 7th with over one hundred thousand men. . . .

MARCH 16

The Emperor marching steadily on to Paris—acclaimed everywhere. Father says the Royal Family will leave Paris in a few days. He has private information, but has not told me any details. I walk about all day. Bands of young men shouting "Vive l'Empereur." It is very exciting. . . .

MARCH 19

The King and Royal Family leave Paris to-night. The Emperor, with a huge army, is expected at Fontainebleau to-morrow. The people in the streets look depressed and uncertain what to do. Father has told me to remain indoors. . . .

MARCH 20: PARIS, 11.30

The Emperor arrived this evening; most of the Imperial Family were at the Tuilleries to greet him. All day the greatest confusion—officers and their staff, couriers, messengers, &c., galloping wildly about the streets.

Great carts of baggage and furniture. It is very amusing: most of the shops closed, the cafés crammed, chairs even put out in the streets. Orators standing on tables making speeches; roars of "Vive l'Empereur," "Vive le petit Caporal." I don't know if it is genuine or not, the French are so excitable. The American Minister sent the Stars and Stripes for father to hang on the balcony, for protection in case of trouble. I saw the Emperor arrive, thousands and thousands cheering him. I got wedged in the crowd and carried along with it. . . .

MARCH 21

People seem mad with joy. What turncoats the French are! Dense crowds surrounding the Tuilleries all day. I saw several of the Imperial Family driving. . . .

MARCH 22

There is to be a gala performance at the opera—the night not yet decided upon. The Emperor drove out to-day and was received with enthusiasm everywhere.

We are leaving shortly for London. Father fears there may be trouble, which might delay our journey. . . .

MARCH 23

The performance at the opera to-night. I am going. . . .

MARCH 24

The scene was superb. For fully twenty minutes the audience yelled when the Emperor appeared; I yelled too. He is fat, looks very dull, tired, and bored.

I had another sitting to-day for Monsieur David.

MARCH 25

We see but few people; all our friends seem to vanish like magic.

A distracted letter from Madame de Staël to-day. She seems in great trouble about everything, particularly her fortune.

Father will answer her under cover to Monsieur Naville, as he fears a letter addressed to her might not reach her. . . .

MARCH 26

The people are settling down as far as one can see. Father, through Monsieur David, has bought one or two beautiful pictures at a very low sum—a head of a “Madonna” on wood panel cut out of a large picture by Murillo, a fine Paolo Veronese, the subject Queen Esther before Ahasuerus, a portrait of Mlle de Lafayette by Mignard, and a lovely head by Greuze. I don’t think father will approve of my picture Monsieur David is painting; it is L’Amour et Psyche. I have not seen the model but would like to. She must be very pretty, only seventeen. We are not to pose together. . . .

MARCH 28

My last sitting, as we leave for England in a few days.

MARCH 29

The Emperor sent an aide-de-camp requesting an interview with father, purely on some financial matters. It places him in a most awkward position; he regrets he did not leave for England sooner. . . .

MARCH 30

The audience at 10.30 this morning. I am not to go. Father was not at all pleased with his interview. He says the Emperor was brusque—that his speech is most vulgar. Joseph Bonaparte was present. I had better quote father’s own words: “The Emperor first asked my advice on important financial matters, to which I have my frank opinion. He then began to question me about Canada, also the slave trade. I replied, 'Sire, my position is such that on these subjects my lips are at present sealed.' He abruptly said, 'Then why did you come here?' Bowing, I answered, 'I obeyed your Majesty's command out of respect for the ruler of France, but as an envoy from the United States to England I am not my own master.' The Emperor, turning his back on me, walked to a window; I having backed out of the room, so ended our interview." . . .

MARCH 31

We are leaving to-morrow for London. Father thinks I am wiser. . . .

APRIL 1: PARIS

We could not start after all—some difficulty about our passports. It seems we cannot leave until the 3rd. Father is much put out. He had a letter to-day from Lord Castlereagh. Mr. Adams is Minister to England. I will be very glad to see him again. . . .

APRIL 2

I saw the Emperor to-day riding with a great staff of officers. He certainly has a most powerful face. I went to the Français last night. We leave early to-morrow. . . .

APRIL 3: MANTES

Our first stopping-place. Arrived in time to go to bed. A ugly country. . . . I wrote a long letter home, as father has an offer to take letters from le Havre. . . .

APRIL 4: LES ANDELYS

A long weary day. There was some mistake about our relay of horses and we were detained three hours. We go by Rouen, as father wants me to see the cathedral. We need not arrive in London until the 10th. . . .

APRIL 5: ROUEN

Arrived here too late to see anything. . . .

APRIL 6: ROUEN

I have been all over the cathedral; it is very beautiful. Joan of Arc was burned here. We leave at 11 o'clock. . . .

APRIL 7: LE HAVRE

We embarked at once. Awfully rough. Such a miserable little packet! Only one cabin, and horrid odours of onions frying. I have gone under. . . .

APRIL 9: DOVER

An awful passage. Father has posted up to London, leaving me here to recover. I will leave to-morrow. . . .

APRIL 10: LONDON

We have been lent such a nice house in St. James's Street and all the servants. I have not seen father yet. . . .

APRIL 11

Mr. Adams does not arrive to take up his post until next month.

Mr. Bayard is appointed Minister to Russia but he is too ill to accept it. He is in Paris. . . .

APRIL 12

I am very busy now as I have all sorts of documents to copy and file. I also have to go with father to take notes. All settling of negotiations is at present entirely carried out by him, so the work is very heavy. Lord Castlereagh is most gracious, even friendly. Our position in London is quite different now; I think I will enjoy myself. Mr. Clay arrives in a few days. The season has not yet commenced but people are returning to town.

I have been specially enjoined not to record any gossip in my diary—to confine it as much as possible to interesting facts. Father dislikes gossip and tittle-tattle, saying it is only fit for idle women. I am having a fine dress made to be presented in May. . . .

APRIL 16: LONDON

I went to St. Paul's Cathedral and the Tower of London to-day; the latter is most interesting.

All we can do now is to go thoroughly into the following matters awaiting Mr. Adams' arrival: Colonial policy; regulating traffic with Canada; opening the St. Lawrence River to us; impressment and blockade in times of war; trade with West Indies and Nova Scotia; trade between India, Europe, and the United States. Father wishes to have everything ready, so as to be able to put matters clearly before the other delegates when all have assembled. Of course, he is anxious to go home, as he has been absent over two years. . . .

APRIL 20: LONDON

We are invited to pay a visit to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth, also to Lord Saye and Sele at Broughton Castle. I went to see a cock-fight yesterday and did not like it; I will not go again. We dine and sup out a great deal. I cannot stand the hours they sit at the table drinking port and Madeira. At some houses they have round shallow silver trays on wheels holding the bottles, which are pushed round the table. I have never been accustomed to drink anything but claret and water, so I have to sit quiet doing nothing and listening to subjects discussed which are far beyond me.

APRIL 26: BROUGHTON CASTLE

This is a most interesting old castle surrounded by a moat with a drawbridge. The hall is full of armour which was fished out of the moat. My bedroom has a sliding panel which opens on the chapel below; other rooms have the same. It is to hear early prayers without leaving one's room. . . .

APRIL 29: CHATSWORTH

We arrived here on Friday. A superb palace. His Grace is so handsome, such great dignity of manner and so kind and gracious. He is only twenty-five. Everything on a splendid scale. They say he will never marry as there is some doubt about his birth—that he is a changeling. We return to London on Tuesday. Father anxious to get back. . . .

APRIL 30: CHATSWORTH

There is a very large party stopping here; I cannot get hold of all the names. One very great lady is the Marchioness of Stafford; she is Countess of Sutherland in her own right. Like all well-born people I have met she is most simple, gracious, and charming. She seems to take an interest in everything and is most kind to me. She took me all over the house, pointing out the pictures and telling me their history. She was a great friend of the unfortunate Queen Marie Antoinette. She has the greatest admiration for Madame de Staël and was much interested in my account of our visit to Coppet. She laughed at the dedication to "Cupidon" in my copy of "Corinne" and calls me "Cupid." I am going to dye my hair black. The ladies are very fine at night and wear wonderful jewels.

We visited some splendid places to-day. Everything is done in such great state. Poor father is so bored; I like it.

MAY 1: CHATSWORTH

We leave to-day. His Grace is putting a fine coach at our disposal with relays of horses all the way to London . . .

15] DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

MAY 3: LONDON

Mr. Adams arrives shortly. We found quantities of invitations.

Dined with Mr. Alexander Baring. His wife was Miss Ingham from Philadelphia, her father a Senator. Mr. Frederick Robinson,* Vice-President of the Board of Trade, was one of the guests. He takes Lord Gambier's place. He seems most affable—a contrast to Lord Gambier, who reminded me of a fire cracker which would never go off but was always sputtering (I am forbidden to express my opinions). Lord Landsdowne and Lord Grey, very important personages, were also present. We are to be presented privately to the Regent on Saturday. . . .

MAY 5: LONDON, SATURDAY

We were received by the Regent at 12 o'clock. Carlton House is very fine but the furniture, &c., is too showy. The Regent and two of his brothers received us. The former is very handsome and dignified but is stout. He was superbly dressed, his brothers as well. Father made such a contrast in his black shorts, white silk stockings, and black coat with his white choker. The Prince has the most charming manners; he was most affable. I was in my new clothes—yellow breeches, white stockings, and a dark-blue coat embroidered in gold. He patted me on the cheek and said with a laugh, "You will break some hearts." Everything was done with the greatest tact—no mention of politics, simply a wish expressed that we should enjoy our sojourn in England. The audience lasted half an hour.

I forgot to mention that a Royal carriage was sent to take us to the palace. There were three footmen behind and father's chasseur, in green with cock's feathers in his hat, stood on the step. We had to have a chasseur as father is "Special Ambassador to England." We never

* Frederick John Robinson. Created Viscount Goderich, April 28, 1827, and Earl of Ripon, April 13, 1833.

MAY 9: THURSDAY

Very busy writing. I have been to two balls and a rout. What a funny thing the latter is. You crawl up the staircase, bow to your hosts at the top, and crawl down again with your clothes torn off your back. They call that pleasure. We dine to-morrow with the Duke of Wellington. . . .

MAY 11: SATURDAY

A very fine dinner. Gold and silver plate superb. It lasted four hours. Everybody of note was present—all the Ministry. Of course, I was much interested. I sat next to Lord Grey. He did not talk but snapped out sentences; his mouth is like a mouse-trap. All the servants, they say, were bailiffs. There is so much splendour and so much absolutely degrading poverty in London. Neither in Paris nor Washington have I seen anything of the kind. . . .

MAY 13: MONDAY

Mr. Adams has arrived and we go to serious work. . . .

MAY 15: WEDNESDAY

A very long interview to-day; all delegates present. Mr. Robinson and father continually poured oil on the troubled waters. Serious matters were discussed, then dropped to be brought up again. They meet again on Friday. . . .

MAY 17: FRIDAY

Mr. Adams is really a thorn; he is so absolutely "Yankee" and of a common type. Why he is Minister here I cannot understand. He is totally unfitted for the post. He bursts out at times, upsetting everybody and everything. Father looks at him with tightly compressed

s. I fear some day he will wither him; now he only makes a clever joke which restores peace. I can see the contempt on the faces of the English delegates; they are so courteous and civil. . . .

MAY 18

Father had a long personal interview with Lord Castlereagh to-day. They have both agreed that this is the better method to pursue. Lord C. told him they did more in an hour than, when all met, in a week. Father has the same confidence in his lordship's wonderful quickness in grasping matters, also his sound good sense of justice that Lord C. seems to reciprocate.

MAY 20: LONDON

Since the signing of the treaty at Ghent there have been a series of leaders in the Times inspired by the war party, the most bitter character. Of course, they have annoyed me very much. Father has spoken to me several times on the subject with his calm good sense. He says this is inevitable—to be regretted, but unworthy notice.

Lord Castlereagh has assured him that when he received the news of the signing of the treaty at Vienna he was rejoiced.

The Duke of Wellington and Lord Liverpool have expressed the same sentiments. What has pleased me more than anything else is that these three great men have reservedly acknowledged that to his good sense, moderation, and firmness the signing of the treaty was due. He has no vanity, but feels it is a reward for all the personal sacrifices he has made.

MAY 23

There is a great activity in military circles; evidently the allies are determined to crush Napoleon once and for all. All this delays us. Father says the climax one

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1815

the other must soon arrive. He is a little anxious, s little. . . .

umours of all sorts of what the Emperor is going try to do. Father fears a great financial crisis. . . .

is but one absorbing topic, "Napoleon" !
" !!!

: LONDON

received a detailed account of the great ceremony Champs de Mars. There was first a solemn Mass, the Emperor swore fidelity to the New Constitution.
s dressed in the Imperial robes of state. His s wore Court dresses of white velvet embroidered short capes of the same material powdered with fees, and caps with masses of white ostrich feathers.
Emperor distributed the eagles to the various regi-

At that moment a terrific thunderstorm broke s, together with the repeated salutes of artillery, most impressive, if not theatrical, scene. In a xt to the throne were all the Imperial princesses their children. I wish I had seen all this. . . .

2
tle news. Messrs. Bayard and Crawford sail in Optuna on the 18th. Father is forced to remain the treaty. Always some new obstacle crops up.
Plans impossible.

5
news. Napoleon left Paris last Monday; they say marching on Brussels. . . .

7
arrives only to be contradicted, but the fact remains Emperor is sweeping all before him. Father only seems troubled about the financial crash which is sure to follow if Napoleon is victorious. . . .

JUNE 18

Great anxiety. Consols have fallen terribly. I have never seen greater depression; everybody one sees seems frightened. A rumour to-day that a battle had been fought and that the Duke of Wellington was crushed; to-night that is contradicted. One cannot believe anything. They say Monsieur Rothschild has mounted couriers from Brussels to Ostend and a fast clipper ready to sail the moment something is decisive one way or the other. . . .

JUNE 25, 1815

The last few days have been so intoxicating that I have not had a moment to write in my diary. When the news was confirmed of the great victory of the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo London went mad and I with it. People I had never seen before rushed up to me in the streets and shook me violently by the hand. Father now says we will have a long and lasting peace—that Napoleon will be obliged to abdicate, that his star has fallen. Many people have been ruined and others have made large fortunes. He is a little annoyed at the desertion of Messrs. Bayard and Crawford, who have sailed in the Neptune, leaving us to get home as best we can. . . .

JUNE 26

The Emperor has arrived in Paris. It seems he wanted to be killed but his marshals forced him into a carriage, as they feared he might be taken prisoner. . . .

JUNE 27

We are nearing the completion of the Treaty of Commerce, and it is to be signed in a day or two. . . .

JUNE 28

Father had a farewell audience with the Regent. I did not go. Mr. Baring is most kind to us. . . .

JUNE 29

Of course, Mr. Adams is retarding matters with his pig-headedness. Mr. Robinson is so entirely different, so suave and conciliatory. Father is perfectly satisfied with the conditions of the treaty. . . .

JUNE 30

Father has decided to leave London on July 4, on our way home. My mother is not well. We have secured a good ship. . . .

JULY 2

The treaty signed to-day but not without difficulty. Mr. Adams at the last moment wished to make all sorts of alterations. Father agreed to some of them, and Mr. Robinson also; if it had been Mr. Goulburn or Adams they would not have agreed so easily. Mr. Robinson has been most charming in every way. We dine for the last time with Mr. Baring. . . .

JULY 3

We are actually off to-morrow. All the Barings were so kind. The dinner was delightful and we parted with them with deep regret. I will be glad to get home; after all it is my home and I love it. But I want to come back. Homme propose mais Dieu dispose.

PART III

THE MINISTRY IN FRANCE

FROM THE RESTORATION OF THE BOURBONS TO THE ASSASSINATION OF THE DUC DE BERRI

NOVEMBER 1815—JULY 1820

NOVEMBER 23, 1815: NEW YORK

Such to my regret, father has written to-day declining the mission to France. Lately he seems to have got an idea in his head that he must devote his attention to making money for his children. Mamma is greatly disappointed as well as Frances; they had been looking forward to the gaieties of Paris life after all I had told them. Albert does not care; he would prefer to live in the backwoods.

ALBERT GALLATIN to THOMAS JEFFERSON

NEW YORK, November 27, 1815

DEAR SIR,

On my return from Washington I found your welcome letter of October 16, which my friends here, daily expecting my return, had kept instead of forwarding

Our opinion of Bonaparte is precisely the same. In what Lafayette's and the opinion of every friend of rational liberty in France did coincide. The return of that man is generally considered by them as a curse. Notwithstanding the blunders and rooted prejudices of the Bourbons, the alienation of the army and the absolute want of physical force had made them, upon the whole, harmless, and as soon as the termination of the Congress* would have left France independent of foreign interference, they must in the course of things either have been overset or have governed according to public opinion. After Bonaparte's restoration, it was hoped to pursue a similar course; others, placing confidence in the declarations of the Allies, hoped to get rid both of him and of the Bourbons. All saw the necessity of defending the country against foreign invasion, but the fatal catastrophe was not, to its full extent, anticipated by any. I call it a catastrophe with an eye only to the present; for, exhausted, degraded, and oppressed as France now is, I do not despair of her ultimate success in establishing her independence and a free form of Government. The people are too enlightened to submit long to any but a military despotism. What has lately passed was a scene in the drama, perhaps necessary to effect a radical cure of that love of conquest which had corrupted the nation and made the French oppressors abroad and slaves at home. As to independence, we have the recent instance of Prussia, which, with far inferior population, resources, or intellect, arose in two years from almost annihilation to the rank of a preponderating Power. But to return to Bonaparte: I lament to see our republican editors so much dazzled by extraordinary actions or carried away by natural aversion to our only dangerous enemy as to take up the cause of that despot and conqueror, and to represent him as the champion of liberty who has been her most mortal enemy, where hatred to republican systems was founded on the most unbounded selfishness and on the most hearty contempt for mankind. I really wish that you would permit me to publish, or rather that you would publish, your opinions on that subject. This might have a tendency to correct those which are daily published, and which do injury to our cause at home, and to our country abroad.

* At Vienna and the dissolution of the Coalition.

under different circumstances, without having any wish for a foreign mission or a residence in France, might have accepted the appointment of Minister there. But, satisfied that nothing can at this moment be effected in that country, and it being very reluctant to my feelings to be on a mission to a degraded monarch and to a nation under the yoke of foreign armies, I thought that I might, without any breach of public duty or of private gratitude, consult my own convenience, and I have accordingly officially informed our Government that I declined altogether the appointment.

ALBERT GALLATIN

NOVEMBER 27

Had a long conversation with father this morning. For the first time he told me of Mr. John Jacob Astor's most generous offer to take him into partnership, with a fifth share in a business whose profits were $100,000 a year. His reasons for refusing were, although he respected Mr. Astor, he never could place himself on the same level with him. I am not surprised, as Astor was a butcher's son at Waldorf—came as an emigrant to this country with a pack on his back. He peddled furs, was very clever, and is, I believe, one of the kings of the fur trade. He dined here and ate his ice-cream and peas with a knife.

DECEMBER 6

He showed me a letter from Mr. Monroe again urging me to accept the French mission. It is in the most flattering terms and begs father not to withdraw from political life—that he is by far the finest diplomatist we have, that anything would be safe in his hands. I did hope he was going to tell me he would accept, but when I ventured to ask him his answer was: "I must think of making proper provision for my family. I am getting old."

DECEMBER 19

Another letter from Mr. Monroe urging father to reconsider the mission to France. We all want him to, but we know perfectly well it is wise for us not to say anything. I honestly feel I would much prefer to live in either France or England—all is so crude in this country. The two years I spent in Russia, France, and England have unfitted me for America.

DECEMBER 26

Father has just brought another letter to copy.

ALBERT GALLATIN to JAMES MONROE

NEW YORK, December 26, 1815

DEAR SIR,

I have received your friendly letters of the 4th and 16th instant, and have a grateful sense of the motives which dictated them. I can assure you that I feel a great reluctance to part with my personal and political friends, and that every consideration merely personal to myself and detached from my family urges a continuance in public life. My habits are formed and cannot be altered. I feel alive to everything connected with the interest, happiness, and reputation of the United States. Whatever affects unfavourably either of them makes me more unhappy than any private loss or inconvenience. Although I have nothing to do with it, the continual suspension of specie payments, which I consider as a continued unnecessary violation of the public faith, occupies my thoughts more than any other subject. I feel as a passenger in a storm—vexed that I cannot assist. This I understand to be very generally the feeling of every statesman out of place. Be this as it may, although I did and do believe that for the present at least I could not be of much public utility in France, I did in my private letter to the President place my declining on the ground of private considerations. In at respect my views are limited to the mere means of istence without falling in debt. I do not wish to cumulate any property. I will not do my family the ury of impairing the little I have. My health is frail; ey may soon lose me, and I will not leave them depend-t on the bounty of others. Was I to go to France, d my compensation and private income (this last es not exceed $2500 a year) did not enable me to live

 I ought, I must live as I can. I ask your forgiveness entering in those details, but you have treated me as friend and I write to you as such. You have from endship wished that I would reconsider my first ecision, and I will avail myself of the permission. It ll be understood that in the meanwhile, if the delay attended with any public inconvenience, a new appoint-ent may immediately take place. My motive for iting when I did was a fear that, specially with respect other missions, the belief that I would go to France ght induce the President to make different arrangeents from those he would have adopted on a contrary position. . . .

ALBERT GALLATIN

JANUARY 2, 1816

really believe he is going to change his mind after all.
 amma does not mention the subject but sighs deeply intervals. Frances declared at breakfast it was useless r her to go on with her French as they were not going Paris. . . .

FEBRUARY 2

urrah! everything couleur de rose. I wrote the letter cepting the French mission for him at his dictation.
 r. Monroe had written him the most pressing letter on e 27th of last month, begging for an immediate reply ne way or the other. All I say to them at home is, Faites vos paquets, mesdames." . . .

ALBERT GALLATIN to JAMES MONROE
accepting the mission to France

NEW YORK, February 2, 1816

DEAR SIR,

I have just received your letter of 27th ult., and have at last concluded to avail myself of the permission given me to accept again the mission to France. I am duly sensible of yours and the President's kindness in having kept the question so long opened, and hope you will find an apology for my hesitation in the importance, at my age, of a decision which must so materially affect the prospects for life of my wife and children. I believe with you that the chance of Congress making any additional allowance to Foreign Ministers is not the better on account either of the present incumbents or of the state of suspense in which some of the important missions are now kept. On what may hereafter be done no reliance can be placed. I calculate only on what now exists, and mean, as I before stated, to regulate my expenses accordingly. If I find it impracticable to live without encroaching on my small property, I will beg permission to return. I believe an additional compensation to be much more important to the United States than to the individual.

I have still some private arrangements to complete, which will not, however, detain me long, and I will be ready to repair to Washington, for the purpose of reading the former correspondence and receiving your instructions, at any time you may be pleased to appoint. It will best suit my convenience to have a short time allowed me on my return from Washington. I will, in the meanwhile, wait for your answer.

I beg you to present Mrs. G.'s and my best respects to Mrs. M. and to Mrs. Hay, and to believe me, with sincere respect and esteem, truly yours.

You will have the goodness to return or destroy the ter in which I had declined the appointment, as it ould not remain on the files of the office.

ALBERT GALLATIN

JAMES MONROE to ALBERT GALLATIN

WASHINGTON, February 13, 1816

EAR SIR,

We were much gratified to find by your last letter at you accepted the mission to France. I have not shed to take you from your affairs, which I am conceded must require your unremitting attention before ur departure; but I now think that the sooner you me here the better it will be. It is known that you ve accepted the mission, and an early visit here will oduce a good effect. The prospect of obtaining an gmentation, in the modes heretofore suggested, of the ary is improved by the acceptance; and, being here, e opportunity you will have of conferring with Mr. Clay
d Mr. Crawford on the subject, and interesting them it, will give to our exertions much aid. This you may ord, in the present state, with perfect delicacy. Every-ing will be done to accommodate your views, in the ne of your departure, that circumstances will permit.
our former letter was not filed in the Department.
will return it to you when we meet. Our best regards Mrs. Gallatin.

With great respect and esteem,

Sincerely yours.

JAMES MONROE

.

APRIL 13

other! I wish people would let him alone. They now fer him the Treasury; again all our plans are at a andstill.

APRIL 18

He will not accept. He says his arrangements to go to France are too far advanced to be changed at this last moment. He also has some very important business to settle in Geneva. The family bourse has accumulated for so long, and now is such a large sum, he thinks something should be done with it. He is the only male Gallatin in the world and the Gallatin women have no claim to it; there are several of them married in Geneva of the different branches. Anyhow, to France we go.

MAY 25

I have been on board the Peacock (Captain Rogers), which is fitting out to take us as soon as possible. The captain told me to-day he would be ready June 1, but from the appearance of things I do not believe he will.

JUNE 2

Of course, the Peacock is not ready. Here we are all packed up and ready; everything most uncomfortable.

JUNE 7

The captain has promised father that he will be able to sail in two days. All our baggage has been put on board.

JUNE 10: ON BOARD THE PEACOCK

We are actually off. Such a host of friends to bid us "God-speed." Mamma in tears, Frances in tears, all the maids in tears, and all the female relations in tears. At the present moment mamma and Frances are waving to the receding shore. Albert is busy with the chickens, of which we have a large supply. . . .

JULY 9: PARIS

After a very fast passage here we are in Paris. I can hardly believe it is true, and keep rubbing my eyes, thinking I may be asleep and dreaming.

LY 10

father had an interview with the Duc de Richelieu* to-day at 12 o'clock; I was present to take notes. He expressed a most friendly feeling that the French Government had for the United States—in fact, was most civil, and cordial.

Father seemed anxious to know what our feelings toward England were. Father answered that the two Governments were on excellent terms, but of course there was friction between the people, which always existed after war—that he regretted that public journals added fuel to the flame.

The Duke regretted that the newspapers misrepresented the present government of France. He could not understand how most of the English and American papers defended a man who crushed liberty everywhere.

The Duke, on leaving, said His Majesty wished father to present his letters of credence to-morrow as the Royal Family were leaving Paris shortly.

LY 11

Accompanied father to the palace to present his letters. Father was amazed at our reception, both by the King and the Prince. Our audience was, of course, private.

Father presented me. Both the King and the Prince expressed themselves as most friendly towards the United States. "Monsieur,"† the Duc d'Angoulême, and the Duc de Berri were present. The King is old and very fat. Monsieur is rather handsome; the Duc d'Angoulême very stern but with a very kind face;

* Duc de Richelieu (Fernand-Emmanuel-Sophie-Septimanie du Richelieu), peer of France. Minister of Foreign Affairs and President of the Council September 26, 1815; died May 17, 1822.

† "Monsieur" Charles-Philippe de France, Comte d'Artois, brother of the King. He succeeded Louis XVIII as King of France September 4, 1824. He reigned under the name of Charles X. His two sons were the Dukes of Angoulême and Berri.

the Duc de Berri very good-looking and very gay and smiling.

Very great etiquette is maintained. They say the King is more strict than even Louis XIV was. We cut a sorry sight in our plain black coats and breeches with all the splendours of the Court uniforms.

The King asked about mamma's health, how she had borne the journey—is really most kind and gracious. Court coaches were sent for us and took us back. Mr. Sheldon* followed us in the second coach.

JULY 30: 21 RUE DE L'UNIVERSITÉ

I have been all day interviewing servants—tall and short, fat and thin—until I can hardly speak. After sorting out what I considered the best, I had them drawn up for father's approval, which I am glad to say he gave.

Major-domo—Callon by name, a very fine person; two house footmen, Edouard and Alfred; two carriage footmen, Louis and Jean; Chef, Monsieur Ratifar, such a great personage (he brings his own kitchen staff); three maids, all pretty—I chose them. I don't know what mamma will say when she sees them. I hate to look at ugly women.

The house is really very fine entre cours et jardin. Furniture old but very good. We have to supply our own plate and linen. We have to make some alterations, so mamma and Frances have gone to the Lussacs at Versailles. I have my own valet, Lucien, aged twenty-five—a very important person he thinks himself, valet to a Secretary of Embassy. He will call me "Excellence."

AUGUST 2

All the morning choosing carriages and horses. Of the latter we got two pairs, very fine for the "Berline," which is all glass in front; this will be for Court and

* Mr. Sheldon was one of Albert Gallatin's secretaries.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

sions. A very strong "Brichka" for everyday ce stout little pair for it. A cabriolet for me; ne big horses will go in single.

6

really in very good order and the servants excel-Madame Patterson Bonaparte has written from asking if she might be allowed to pay us a visit days. She is on her way to America. She arrives 0th.

The following letter written at this date gives an interesting ace financial condition of France after Waterloo.

LETTER from ALBERT GALLATIN to JAMES MONROE AT WASHINGTON

PARIS, August 6, 1816

You were informed by my dispatch No. 1 of my in this city on the 9th of last month. On the had audience of the King, to whom I delivered ers of credence. The reception, both from him m the princes, was what is called gracious, and anied with the usual expressions of most friendly ion towards the United States.

de here has been too short to enable me to form nion of the prospect we have of succeeding in ng the indemnities so justly due to our citizens, do not wish to enter into the discussion until I scertained as far as practicable the disposition Government in that respect. Whatever this may situation of their finances will be a formidable e in our way. That there will be a great deficit d every succeeding year until the foreign contribure discharged is notorious. The precise amount deficit for this year is not so well known, but, source entitled to confidence, has been stated to me as exceeding 350 millions of francs. It is not believed that any practical increase of taxes can produce more than 100 millions. The residue, or 250 millions a year for five years, must therefore remain unpaid, or be provided for by creating new stock. That situation would, indeed, be deplorable in a country where there is no public credit, and where the Treasury cannot raise money in any other manner than by selling their 5 per cent. stock at the market rate, which does not now exceed 58 per cent. I still hope that the statement is exaggerated; but the reliance which seems to be placed on the forbearance of the allied Powers confirms the opinion that the internal resources are not sufficient to meet the foreign demands.

It has been suggested to me that some classes of claims, particularly that of vessels burnt at sea, would, if pressed by themselves, have a better chance of being admitted; but, unless otherwise instructed, I will not pursue a course which might injure the general mass of our claims. . . .

ALBERT GALLATIN

AUGUST 7

His Majesty has expressed a wish—in fact, a command—that mamma is to be received in private audience, and has fixed the 9th. Fortunately, she has all her frocks ready. She is to be received in the morning. All the corps diplomatique have called, and now it is nothing but returning visits. The de Broglies are still with Madame de Staël at Coppet, but are returning to Paris shortly. The Duc de la Rochefoucauld d'Enville (a distant relation) has been most kind, and has told father what he ought to do and what he ought not to do.

AUGUST 10

Mamma was most graciously received. Father accompanied her. She had to wear full Court dress at eleven in the morning. She was first received by the King, who spoke English to her, much to her relief. When she retired from the presence she was escorted by Madame de Duras to the apartments of the Duchesse d'Angoulême. It seems it was most trying. She has not yet recovered from the fatigue, as she is not strong.

AUGUST 11

Madame Patterson Bonaparte arrived this morning from Geneva. Her baggage nearly filled the antechamber. She is very lovely, but hard in expression and manner. I don't think she has much heart. Her son seems to be her one thought. She had a very long talk with Father about his future (her son's); she is most ambitious for him. She even has a list of the different princesses who will be available for him to marry: as he is only ten years old, it is looking far ahead.

I have but little work to do here. I foresee I will soon be in mischief. Paris is indeed the paradise of young men.

AUGUST 12, 1816

Madame Bonaparte's conversation most brilliant. At supper last night she said that when in Paris just after the hundred days, she was at a ball at the British Embassy. She noticed she was much stared at, and that some of the ladies curtsied to her. She asked the Duke of Wellington what it meant, and he told her she was taken for Pauline Bonaparte* as she was so strikingly like her, and that people were so amazed at thinking Pauline Bonaparte would have dared come back to France. The Ambassador came up to her at that moment to lead her to supper. This intrigued the company all the more. She is frightfully vain.

AUGUST 14

Father had an audience of the King this morning. He suddenly said: "I hear that Madame Jerome Bonaparte is with you. Pray express to her our regret she will not come to our Court, but that we know her reasons for not doing so." When father told her she was much gratified, and said, "That Corsican blackguard would not have been so gracious."

* Sister of Napoleon, married Prince Borghese.

AUGUST 15

Madame Bonaparte left to-day for Havre to embark for America. She is such an interesting person, we will miss her. She gave mamma a ruby-velvet frock to cut up for Frances. To father she gave a really beautiful turquoise and diamond brooch. He will never wear it, so I will have it.

AUGUST 17

We are very busy with documents to be copied to send to America. The Duc de Richelieu had a very long conference with father yesterday. The latter likes him so much—admires all his fine qualities, particularly his great simplicity, frugality, and above all his honesty.

AUGUST 23

I drove my new "curricie" for the first time to-day. I do not know which was the most proud, myself, Lucien, or the horse. It is rather difficult to drive a spirited horse and to keep taking off one's hat every moment. I have to be on the qui vive not to fail to return a salute; I will do better when I get to know people's faces better, but now I find it most difficult. I saw many lovely ladies, and I flatter myself some of them saw me. I find they notice much more when I am driving than when I am on foot. Moral—always drive.

I have just come back from walking in the gardens of the Palais Royale. How pretty Frenchwomen are! I know I shall get into all sorts of scrapes. I don't remember if I noted our visit to Monsieur de Lafayette. He is stopping with a Mr. Parker some distance from

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

He has permission to come to Paris but does not wish to do so at present. His greeting to father most cordial. We are soon going to see him again. I find it most difficult to keep up my diary; lately I have neglected it terribly. In the future I will have to write when I can find time and from memory. I work all the morning, receiving for father all kinds of acquaintances of people; dining out, suppers, theatres, all sorts and kinds of varied amusements. Hardly time to sleep.

I have made friends with a charming little danseuse of the opera, Rosette by name.

.....
Week since I have been able to take up my pen. On Monday father and mother were commanded to dine with the King—a very great honour it seems, and one reserved for princes and ambassadors. A rather amusing event happened. After dinner a small reception was given. Amongst the ladies received was a Comtesse de ..*. She is the daughter of the Marquis d'Osmond,† Ambassador in England. In a loud tone she expressed astonishment at the presence of Monsieur Gallatin, his wife to the Prince de Condé.‡ His answer to her was "His Majesty cannot too highly honour Monsieur Gallatin, as, although representing a new country, his ancestors had served France for generations and one had been a most honoured and intimate friend of Henri IV."§ It seems this got to the King's ears, who was much amused, and when Madame de Boigne made her curtsy he turned his back on her. She called on mamma the next day, and was most gracious and asked too many Charlotte Louise Elénore Adelaïde d'Osmond married at the age of sixteen General de Boigne. Separated from him after ten months married life. He was immensely rich and allowed her a large income. Eustache Marquis d'Osmond, Peer of France, Ambassador in England.

Prince de Condé, born 1736, Duc de Bourbon.

Appendix II

GASPAR GALLATIN
FRIEND OF HENRI IV

estions. They say she is the mistress of the Duc d'Orléans, who is not allowed to come back to France. Madame de Staël has arrived. I went with father to see her to-day; she looks very ill. She had heard of Madame de Boigne's behaviour and was very angry. She said, "That woman is effrontery itself," and "Truth be told, I never received her invitation to her christening." Madame de Camille was much amused and told many funny anecdotes about Madame de B. It seems her husband is an Italian nabob who has property at Chambéry. They do not live together but he allows her a large income. Bertine de Broglie was delightful—so glad to see us and is so natural and unaffected. They are looking for a house, but are at present with her mother. . . .

DECEMBER

My neglected diary! I have broken with Rosette and now dance with the jeunes filles du monde. It is not amusing as I take them back to their mothers when the dance is over. We hardly speak a word. How I hate this etiquette! We dined yesterday at the Duc de Berri's. They were both most gracious; she is like a spoiled child and has very bad manners. The Duke of Wellington was a guest, and after dinner the Duc de Berri spoke most kindly to me. They say he has many friends in the coulisse of the opera. He is so gay and cheerful—such a contrast to his father and uncle. They say the Orléans family will soon return to the Palais Royal where they receive in the most informal manner. A great party at the Duke of Wellington's.

It seems the Royal Family were most rude, but that the duke did not pay any attention and rather put them to shame. Some extraordinary English women were present.

JANUARY. 1817

I am trying to collect my senses as it has been nothing but a whirl of gaiety. Father insisted upon having a er Christmas Day: Madame de Staël, the de Broglies, zo di Borgo, Baron Humboldt, Constant Rebecque, sieur la Place, the Duc de Richelieu, Chateaubriand, and Duchesse de Clermont-Tonnerre, Rochefoucauld, on, and a host of others. We sat down thirty-eight. rt and Frances were allowed to appear on this occa-

Mamma had a huge Christmas-tree in one of the ying-rooms. Small souvenirs for all. As Pozzo was ing off some of the presents the tree caught fire: Broglie pulled off his coat, I followed suit, and we thered the fire before it did much damage. At ight mamma had had prepared "egg nog" and ple toddy," and we all drank each other's health merican fashion. Madame de Staël looks very ill. r all our guests had left I slipped off to the Maison ée—quite a different company. I managed to slip the house at 6 o'clock without any of the servants ng me.

at gaiety there is in Paris this season of the year! rybody seems cheerful and happy, and all is so ht. Father and I dined on Sunday with the Prince Princess Galitzin. Katinka Galitzin is pretty and of fun; we get on capitally. She has much more ty than French girls, being Russian. The son of the de Caumont la Force is courting her. In the evening eception at Court. Mamma had excused herself he plea of illness, but the fact is her religious prin- es will not allow her to go to any big ball or Court Sunday. It is a little awkward for father as most he big Court functions are on Sunday. I forgot to tion the splendid ceremony at Notre Dame on istmas Eve. The cathedral was in complete darkness e for a few dim lamps. As the bell rang twelve strokes urst of light and the most beautiful singing I ever rd. The crowd was terrific; several women fainted. as an hour getting out, so was late for a supper at the ée. Toutes ces "petites dames!"

What a gorgeous New Year! Visits, visits—nothing but visits. My pockets are empty. Étrennes for all the servants, presents to all the family, not forgetting my coulisse friends, has cleared me out.

Another Court function on Sunday, which, again on the plea of illness, mamma begged to be excused. His Majesty noticed her absence and most graciously inquired if she were seriously ill. Father, who is so absolutely frank, answered: "Sire, I regret that my wife's religious principles prevent her going to any entertainment on Sunday." The King, instead of being annoyed, answered, "Pray convey our respects to Madame Gallatin, and tell her we honour her principles and her courage." Father was much relieved.

JANUARY 9

To our immense surprise, a Court courier arrived this morning to say that his Majesty would in person call at 1.30. No time for any preparations. Father said, "We will receive his Majesty in absolute simplicity, as behoves our republic." He arrived with Monsieur in a very simple coach. Mamma, father, the children, and myself received him under the perron in the courtyard. He is very infirm—apologized for not getting out of the carriage. He handed mamma a large roll which was a very fine engraving of himself. Written in English is "To Madam Gallatin, with all the respect due to a woman who has principles. Signed, Louis." He greatly admired Frances, who really promises to be very beautiful. Her complexion, like mamma's, is absolutely perfect. After much bowing, &c. &c., he drove off. It seems no such honour has ever been conferred by him before. Everybody tells father the King pays more attention to him than to anybody else. Comte de Gallatin, our cousin, the Minister from Würtemberg, says he is very jealous. By the way, his story is an odd one. His father was in the service of the Duke of Brunswick when the duke was

d at the Battle of Jena. As he was dying he said the King of Würtemberg, "I leave to you my most loved friend." The King took him into his service and made him a Count. Unfortunately, this one only has two daughters. We are on the most intimate terms with the family. Poor mamma is quite dazed—the whole manner of living is so entirely different from that in America; this, coupled with her want of fluency in French, adds to her troubles. Fortunately, we have been able to obtain the services of an excellent housekeeper, Madame Berthal by name—a Russian who speaks French language under the sun. Nothing ever affects her; he is always pleased, and I have never seen him discontented at anything. I really believe if he was given breakfast at midnight, his dinner at 6 A.M., and his supper at midday he would hardly notice the difference. We have just been seeing the footmen, coachmen, &c., in their new liveries. For ordinary occasions, dark blue breeches, yellow waistcoats, and dark blue coats with silver buttons, black silk stockings; state liveries, dark blue breeches, white silk stockings, yellow waistcoats, light blue cloth coats with broad silver braid and silver buttons. The latter is exact, as dark blue does not figure in heraldry.

Father is a little doubtful, fearing Americans may object to so much show, but he feels the Court of France requires it.

My brother's black, Peter, whom we brought from America, has taught the cook how to make buckwheat cakes. This was as a complete surprise. Poor mamma burst out laughing when she saw them. Frances is taking dancing lessons. I have learnt to cut a "pigeon's wing" and had great success at the Galitzin's on Sunday evening. . . . My cousin, Count Gallatin, is most kind; he and his wife have told mamma all that is required of her at Court. We really are in a strange position. Father represents a republic, and with all his aristocratic relations here much more is expected of mamma, but her manners are so simple and so utterly unaffected that father begs her not to change them in any way.

An accident happened to mamma's berline to-day. Turning from the Faubourg St. Honoré into the Rue des Écuries d'Artois, one of the hind wheels caught on the high kerb and was wrenched off. Fortunately, the horses are very quiet and were not frightened. Frances was a little cut by the glass of the window she was sitting by. The English Ambassadors was passing at the time, and very kindly insisted upon taking mamma to the Embassy, which is close by. After having Frances' face seen to she drove mamma home; it was most gracious of her.

I have made the acquaintance of a young American who is studying painting, Grayson by name. He is going to introduce me to the "grisette world"; I am looking forward to it. We go to one of the students' balls on Sunday night. I must keep this very quiet, as I fear father would be much annoyed. He does not mind how much I go out in the grand monde but he dislikes anything like low life. He never had a youth himself; he was penned up in Geneva, and when he went to America he lived a simple life in the wild parts. I would not care to do anything to annoy him.

My grisette ball was not a success—the fact is, it was not fit for any gentleman to go to; I am not particular but there are limits. The men were much worse than the women. How can they degrade themselves to such an extent! They left nothing to the imagination. I was determined to stop to the end, and even went to supper at a restaurant at the Halle. I will never forget the horrible orgie. There were Russian, Spanish, Italian, and Prussian students; they might have been wild beasts from their behaviour. This has been a lesson to me; I am glad of the experience and will profit by it.

the Elysée Bourbon last evening there was a little vaudeville played by children which was very pretty; then supper, and we danced a contre-danse, which gave me a chance to cut my "pigeon's wings." At eight in succession when my turn came as advancing cavalier. Madame de Boigne, in that horrid voice of hers, said, "Très bien, mon jeune Américain." How I like that woman! I cannot help it, she is nothing but pretension. I believe she thinks herself the most important person in France.

I dined at the Russian Embassy yesterday and made a fool of myself. It was a delightful dinner, and I dined in Princess Katinka Galitzin. There was a large monté of nougat. When it was passed to me the other guests had only taken off some of the ornaments. Princess K. wanted some of the nougat, so I boldly stuck it with a silver fork; I did not think it was so brittle—it went the whole thing, scattering the nougat in all directions. If the floor had only opened! Bits of the nougat stuck in the ladies' hair, on their necks and shoulders. I was filled with confusion. Pozzo di Borgo exclaimed, "Voilà l'Américain qui attaque la citadelle de Russie." This caused a general laugh and put everybody in a good humour. I have not got over it yet. I think the ladies forgave me as I am so young.

Mamma is so tiresome. When we were children, every Saturday night we had to take a powder and in the morning a black draught—always administered by mamma in person. She really forgets I am no longer a child; it is all very well for Frances and Albert. I had a bad headache for several days, and asked mamma's aid to give me a powder. To my horror, at 6 o'clock in the morning (without knocking) in walked mamma with a black draught in her hand and a frilled nightcap on her head. No use resisting; but as she left the room I said, "Merci, Madame l'Ambassadrice." I don't think I quite liked the tone I said it in. . . .

TUESDAY

I am in horrible disgrace. The Russian Ambassador gave mamma a beautiful cat. It is always in a large basket in her boudoir. Yesterday some people were coming to déjeuner. I was early and alone in the boudoir where we always assemble when en petite committée. Mamma had been sent a quantity of Madonna lilies which were in a vase. I do not know what possessed me, but I took one up and commenced to "annunciate" the cat in solemn tones. I had my back to the door, when I suddenly heard my name pronounced—"James," but in such a tone as only mamma can say it. I was saved for the moment by the Duc and Duchesse de Clermont-Tonnerre being announced. I hardly dared speak at table as I knew I was in disgrace. Dear mamma's French is very doubtful, and she never can get a name right. There was a pause in the general conversation. She turned to the duke and said, "How is Madame de Bidé," meaning Madame de Budé, the grandmother of the duchess. This was really too much for me. I exploded, and fortunately choked, and had hurriedly to leave the table. When I returned naturally I apologized, but I might have fallen into the middle of Stonehenge from the expression of their faces. Only dear father had a twinkle in his eye. He I know will get me out of this scrape.

Mamma sent for me before supper and I had a mauvais quart d'heure. I humbly apologized and was most repentant. I then threw my arms around her and gave her a good hug. She gave me six tracts, one for each day of the week; I promised to read them. The funniest fact of it is that Mourussa, the cat, gave birth to six kittens in the night. I only suggested to father that one might be called Annunciata. He did not answer but looked out of the window.

I am very sorry for mamma; I can see she is not happy. Father is so occupied that I do not think he notices it. It is hard for her: she speaks so little French, has really no friends whom she cares for, and her position is a very difficult one. The Court is so hemmed in by etiquette to which she is not accustomed. She does not understand the ways of Frenchwomen of the grand monde and is continually shocked. Indeed I am not surprised the only women she finds anything in common with are the ladies of the English Embassy and some of the English residents in Paris. There are few Americans, and those that are here are mostly in commerce and without education. I went with her two days ago to call on a Mrs. P., the wife of a very rich but common American. They have recently bought a very fine hotel in the Rue de Varennes; they sold all the beautiful old furniture and have refurnished it in execrable taste, but she is evidently very proud of it and insisted upon showing us all the reception-rooms. In one room there was a large bronze replica of a statue by "John of Bologna." For something to say, I admired it. She folded her arms and, with a palpable wink, said, "Bologna done it, but I am going to have pantaloons made for it when I receive." Mamma's face was a study. She relaxed into a smile when the poor woman offered her molasses candy and dough-nuts, saying she made them herself to remind her of home.

Now that the gaieties are over I am hard at work again; the continual writing, copying of documents, and so forth is very trying. Father cannot pin the Duc de Richelieu down to anything definite.

FEBRUARY

To father's great delight, Lafayette dined here last week, Baron Humboldt, Madame de Staël, Duc and Duchesse Plaisance, Monsieur la Place, Pozzo di Borgo, and the de Broglies. A rather amusing incident. We were all assembled in the drawing-room. Monsieur de Lafayette had not arrived. Monsieur la Place was talking to me when Lafayette was announced. La Place turned very pale. Just as dinner was announced he went up to father begging leave to retire, as he had been ill and felt very faint. It seems he found it impossible to sit at the same table with Lafayette on account of his relations to the Bourbons. This amused Madame de Staël very much, and I think the dinner was gayer without him. Madame Bonaparte has announced her arrival from America in May.

There has not been a lull in the gaieties, which I thought were over. Invitations keep pouring in. Mamma only accepts those which she is obliged to as it fatigues her so much; father the same, so I have to represent the family on all occasions. When we are at home en famille, which both mamma and father prefer, I find it intolerably dull. They both read or write and rarely speak. Frances goes to bed very early, so does Albert. Mamma retires at 10.30; father sits up nearly all night. About 11 o'clock I begin to yawn, and off I go, but not to bed; I generally do not get home until 3 and 4 in the morning. I hate this sort of deception. When I am twenty-one I will openly avow my sins.

Skating all day on the Petit Lac in the Bois de Bologne; I enjoy it immensely. It seems so funny, hardly any of the French ladies can even stand on their skates. The men are really too absurd.

A few Russians and Poles skate well, but all are very cheerful. Large bonfires are lighted on the bank so that we can warm ourselves. The Galitzins brought some punch and cakes. They allow their daughter to skate, so do the Ourousoffs. No French girls, only married women. The G.'s sent two beautiful sledges that a man can push from behind—one in the shape of a springing tiger, and it is lined with tiger-skin and cushions of the same. The other, a large swan, is most graceful; this is lined with blue velvet. They have only just arrived from Russia. We men in turn push the ferent ladies about on the ice. I don't think I cared much about it. The King's coach passed at the very fast pace that it is always driven; much to our surprise, it returned and stopped for his Majesty to watch us. Of course, the men—uncovered, but he most graciously sent one of his gentlemen to say that we were not to notice him but go on with our sport, which he wished to watch. He stopped quite half an hour. It is such a pity that the beautiful Bois de Boulogne has been destroyed! Most of the fine trees have been cut down and most of the undergrowth. This was done by the soldiers of the Allies.

I have made some excellent friends of my own age or a little older. The Duc de Guiche, the son of the Duc de Gramont, Rochefoucauld, whom I knew when I was here in 1815, Balliet La Tour, Puységur, are my intimates. I have tried to make friends with some of the attachés at the English Embassy, but I am sorry to say they do not seem to care for us but seem to shun us as if we were in a war. Later others may come with a different spirit, but they are often changing. Nobody could be more gracious than the Duke of Wellington. Father had met me so often at Madame de Staël's; she has that wonderful gift of bringing people together and putting them all at their ease. I had what might have been a most unpleasant adventure last evening. I had noticed several times a very pretty what I thought was a grisette in the gardens of the Palais Royal. She didn't seem to mind my rather bold way of staring at her—in fact, she smiled. As I am always ready for adventure, I wrote a bit of paper asking for a rendezvous. I dropped it just as she was approaching me. I saw her pick it up. She did not look at me, but shortly after a man, raising his hat, handed me a note, only a few words, making an appointment at a house in the Rue St. Honoré for 8.30 in the evening. Naturally I was there. An old woman met me at the door. Putting her finger to her lips and bidding me to follow her, she mounted to the second floor. Letting us in with a key, I found myself in a most beautiful apartment. She threw open the door, and to my amazement there was my grisette with a child of about two years on her lap and one a year or so older standing by her side. All were beautifully dressed, and sitting by a little table was a man. He rose, and with a bow said, "Monsieur, you are most welcome to our humble home. My wife has kept the children out of bed expressly for you to see them." Imagine my deep mortification. She is Mademoiselle R—— of the Théâtre Français. It was a lesson I will not forget and which I richly deserved. They both begged me to honour them with a visit at any time. She knew perfectly well who I was. I will certainly not forget them. We are getting very near Lent now, when, of course, we will be very quiet. I love the spring in Paris—the Champs Elysées is so beautiful with the trees and brilliant sunshine. I have been fencing a great deal lately, not that I anticipate a duel; in fact, I would not be allowed to fight on account of father's position—not that I want to in the least, but I think fencing gives great ease, grace, and balance. I took the children on Sunday to Versailles. The great fountains played. I took Frances to see them; they are a wonderful sight. Of course, mamma would not go, as it was Sunday. We lost Albert and did not find him for several hours. When he appeared he had his hat covered with insects and butterflies on pins that he had caught. I made him throw them all away. He is really incorrigible; he ought to be sent to a boarding-school or college.

MARCH 1817

Now that Lent has come we have much more leisure, no Court entertainments of any kind. Father has received an intimation that he will be required to go to the Netherlands in July to help Mr. Eustace in his negotiations

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

demnity, &c. &c. He does not care much about g but never shirks his duty. I will go with him. ame de Staël is very ill. She sent for father to-day had a long conference with him, principally about property. He had advised her to place all her etary affairs in the hands of Monsieur Rothschild ondon. She did not take his advice at the time now repents it. It seems she is much troubled t what she should do for Mr. Rocca (her husband). great love for her daughter is overwhelming; she s to leave her the bulk of her property. At one ent—strong woman as she is—she talks of approach-leath; the next moment of the house she has taken the entertainments she intends to give. Madame mier has a beautiful hotel in the Rue de (illegible). receives on Thursday evenings, always reclining on aise-longue. She is certainly very brilliant and witty. does not like Madame de Boigne and calls her une ncieuse. She says, "Madame de B. only acknowl-s two families, that of the Bon Dieu and the onds."

ink I have forgotten to mention the attempt on life of the Duke of Wellington. As he was driving e in the Champs Elysées a shot was fired, but fortunately missed him—in fact, the bullet has not been d. Some malicious people say he had the shot fired elf. Naturally he has lots of enemies. So great n as he is can brush such insinuations aside without g them a thought. He certainly is the most impor-personage in France at present, and if anything ened to him it would be a dire calamity. Indeed, very odd how persistently rude the Royal Family to him. He never shows the slightest displeasure is always dignified and courtesy itself. Father has greatest admiration for him, and believes him to be rn diplomatist as well as a great soldier and leader en.

I have just heard that a man called Cantillon has been arrested. They say he is but a man of straw and that his arrest was made to appease the English and that he will never be tried. The extraordinary thing is that, with the exception of the Duc de Berri, not one of the Royal Family expressed the slightest sympathy or congratulated the Duke on his escape.

MARCH 26

The Chamber closed to-day. I am getting a little tired of Lent, mamma will keep it so strictly. I see at times it rather annoys father, but he does not say anything. I can never quite make out what his ideas are on religion. He is a Calvinist and was brought up when a child by Mlle Pictet very strictly. I think Voltaire and his ideas greatly influenced him. I do not care what his religion is, nobody could be better than he is. Always so gentle, smoothing over everything and keeping peace, thoughtful for everybody, even for the servants—could there be a better man? I only wish I could approach him in any way. Mamma was a Miss Nicholson; I must have some of the “Old Nick” in me from that side of the family.

MARCH 29

Father to-day told me if I could find an agreeable travelling companion that he would give me the money to go to Bourg to see Jacques Cœur's house, which is so beautiful. I fear my travelling companion must be of the male sex, although father did not stipulate this. It is rather a long journey, quite three days to get there.

I was showing Frances to-day how I could tame her canary. I drew a chalk-line on the table, caught the little bird, and laid him on his back on the line. He remained perfectly quiet. Frances was delighted. She put out her hand to take him up. The poor little thing did not move—he was dead. I was so sorry. Poor Frances cried bitterly. I went out at once and bought her another, but she is not comforted.

APRIL 15

dined with father at the Duke of Wellington's yesterday. Great magnificence, the plate gold. It is the royal plate sent from England for his use. Shoals of powdered lackeys in the Wellington liveries, eight gold andelabra on the table. In the centre of the table a huge gold basin filled with flowers. All the service silver with the sweets and dessert, and then all was gold. Prince Talleyrand was present, the Duc de Rohan, Duchesse de Courland (niece of Talleyrand, who seems devoted to him), Duc and Duchesse de Duras, the Galitins, Caumont la Forces, de Broglies, Comte and Comtesse d'Orsay, Duc and Duchesse de Grammont, Comtesse de Joigne and her brother Osmond, the English Ambassador, Chevalier Stuart, Baron Vincent (Austria), the Duc and Duchesse de Fernan-Nunez (Spain), Baron Fagel (Pays Bas), Comte and Comtesse Soltz (Prussia), Pozzo di Borgo (Russia), Marquis Alfieri (Sardinia), Prince Castelcicala (Deux Sicèles), Comte and Comtesse de Gallatin (Würtemberg), and a host of others. The Duke was in fine spirits and received congratulations on all sides.

APRIL

At last the Orléans family have been granted permission to return to France. They are installed at the Palais Royal. They were not well received by the King; in fact, the only members of the Royal Family who greeted them cordially were the Duc and Duchesse de Berri.

We went officially with father to the Palais Royal after he had requested an audience. We were received in the simplest manner possible. They seem like any ordinary bourgeois family. The Duke* is short, marked

* Louis Philippe d'Orléans, Duc d'Orléans, born September 6, 1773, reigned as Louis Philippe I, died in England (to which country he fled in 1848) August 26, 1850. He was the son of Philippe Egalité, Duc d'Orléans, who voted for the death of Louis XVI.

Bourbon features, decidedly common-looking. The Duchess is not pretty but most gracious and charming, Mademoiselle as well. We stopped quite half an hour, his Highness asking many questions about America, of which he seems to have great knowledge. He spoke of Monsieur de Lafayette and was au courant with father's intimacy with him. Driving home, father, who rarely expresses any opinion about people, said, "That man is an intriguer; I would not trust him." We had seen and been presented to him in England three years ago. A Court reception to-morrow.

I had rather an unfortunate adventure some few nights since, but it I hope will never get to father's ears. After going to the opera, a charming little danseuse, whose acquaintance I had only just made, asked me if I would sup with her at her apartment. Much to my surprise I found the greatest luxury—some personage evidently in the background. A round table with couverts for two. We had just commenced to sup when I heard a noise in the antechamber. My charmer exclaimed, "Mon Dieu, je suis perdue, cachez-vous." I rushed behind a curtain. The door opened, and to my dismay I recognized the voice of the Duc de Berri. He said, "So mademoiselle has an amant." Clare tremblingly answered, "Non, Monseigneur, it was only mamma who I was giving a little supper to as you did not arrive." He asked, "What has become of her?" "She has gone, Monseigneur, as she was not properly dressed to receive your Highness." By bad luck I had left my hat on a chair. The Duke picked it up and said with a laugh, "So, madame, votre mère wears a man's hat, which she has forgotten." I felt it was time for me to discover myself, no matter what the consequences might be. I stepped out from behind the curtain, saying, "Monseigneur, it is my hat; I am mademoiselle's mother." He broke into fits of laughter, poor Clare into tears. He laughed so heartily that I could not help joining him; en became serious and in the kindest manner said, "Young man, you have acted in a most honourable manner not to play eavesdropper. Tout est pardonné. Let us sup together." Clare rang and ordered another table to be laid, and we had a most cheerful supper. When he rose to leave he begged me to accompany him, and of course, I did. Going down the stairs he took my arm and said most kindly, "I am really the one to blame; here we have met as Mr. Smith and Jones," adding, "in fact, you have unknowingly done me a great favour, as I was most anxious to get rid of Clare; you have given me the opportunity. I am your debtor, but do not forget I am Mr. Smith." Mr. de la Fayette always speaks English to me, even at Court.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

I have not seen Clare again and do not intend doing so. I met the Duc yesterday. He burst out laughing at me, with a twinkle in his eye, "Have you seen your friend Mr. Jones, lately? Mr. Smith, I hear, has gone back to England."

The Prince de Condé is very ill. His son, the Duc de Bourbon, it seems, leads the most extraordinary life—careless for people of the lower classes, shows himself impolitic with the commonest of drabs, hates royalty, and is unfit for decent society.

It was to my delight, Lord Huntly (now Duke of Gordon) was here to-day. He is very old but looks wonderfully well. He said, "You look a man now; when I last saw you were a child." He is a very great favourite at Court.

Father went again to-day to see Madame de Staël. He came back very depressed, as he fears she will not be long. She was very excited, talking about Jacques, from whom she is descended through the Gallatins. He was certainly an extraordinary man. I never thought that any of our family benefited by his fortune. He died some day going to Bourgs to see his palace.

which they say is the finest Renaissance palace in existence. If Jeanne d'Arc had not had those absurd visions she might be rich. Madame de Staël says that both she and father get their brains from Cœur; they certainly get nothing else. Father does not inherit the latter's love of show. I really believe he would be perfectly happy in one room with any amount of strong segars and a few clever men to discuss abstruse questions with. I am glad to say he has a certain amount of pride, which makes him live in a proper style, which his present position demands.

JULY

Father was sent for this morning as Madame de Staël grew worse. He is much distressed, as he has the most profound admiration for her.

JULY 18

Madame de Staël died yesterday. She is to be buried at Coppet; so, at least, is the present intention. We are obliged to leave for Brussels to-morrow, greatly to father's regret, as he would have liked to have paid his last respects to her by going to Coppet for the funeral. He considers her loss a public one, that she was a great power and that she had more influence on public opinion than any other person excepting the actual Ministers in office. Her mind, instead of diminishing with years, improved, and she became more and more brilliant. The Duchesse de Broglie is inconsolable.

I saw Auguste de Staël this morning.

Arrived yesterday in Brussels. Are not well lodged at the Rue de la Loi. Father wishes to confer with Baron Fagel. After a week of idleness the King has decided that the negotiations must be held at the Hague. After all, we need not have come here until much later. We are stopping here for several weeks before going to the Hague. It is extremely dull; everybody out of town, houses shut up, very hot, and absolutely nothing for me to do. Father has given me permission to go to Ostend for some bathing, which I certainly will take advantage of.

JULY 29: OSTEND

Arrived here to-day, a lovely place in the Dunes. I am at a very comfortable hostelry, the Hotel d'Allemagne. The bathing splendid. Full of all the bourgeoisie from Brussels, Ghent, Bruges, &c. &c. Very amusing watching the paquets coming from England. The people of the place rough Flemish—loud, coarse voices but good-natured and healthy. Fishing is the chief industry.

AUGUST 3

Went to Bruges yesterday and stopped the night—such an interesting place but falling into decay. Wonderful buildings and a beautiful cathedral with such a sweet chiming of bells. I have made friends with a nice Englishman, a Mr. Marchmont, who went with me. It is sad to see a place once so opulent and of such importance practically finished. It has played in the past such an important part in history. Ostend interests me on account of the siege. One of our ancestors was killed here. In the "Etrennes de la Noblesse," which is the peerage of France before the Revolution, volume 1778, the following anecdote historique:

François de Gallatin fut blessé mortellement au siège d'Ostende—à l'attaque du chemin couvert où il avoit combattu avec la plus grande valeur, à la tête des trois compagnies de Grenadiers du Régiment de la Cour-au-Chantre, qu'il commandoit, et qui y furent écrasés—on lui coupa la cuisse quelques instants avant sa mort on lui demanda ses dernières volontés pour son fils, encore enfant: 'Qu'il vive mon exemple,' répondit il.'

Father has written to me to join him at the Hague on August 15, so I will stop here until then. I forgot to mention that when I was at Brussels I visited the plains of Waterloo. I shut my eyes and tried to picture the whole scene of the battle. I cannot but feel pity for the Emperor—to have risen to the great heights that he did and now a prisoner at such a horrible place as St. Helena. He was a very great man and he rose alone without any help. He, I am certain, had great magnetic force. I think his family were a great drag on him. His brothers, with one exception, were full of greed.

My friend Marchmont has not turned out quite as nice as I thought he was. He asked me yesterday if I would lend him one hundred francs, saying he was expecting money from England. He did not turn up at déjeuner this morning, and when I asked for him mine host with surprise said, "Did not monsieur know that Monsieur Marchmont left by the packet this morning for England?" With this he handed me a letter—it was only a few lines—which showed me what a dupe I had been: "Young man, never lend money to a stranger in a foreign country," signed "Marchmont." I hope some day to meet my fine gentleman.

AUGUST 15: THE HAGUE

Arrived here last night, but father will not arrive until to-morrow. We are lodged in a very nice house which adjoins one occupied by Mr. Eustace.* We are to eat with him. Lucien is with me. If Brussels was dull, what is this place? It is absolutely dead. Very clean outwardly, but they tell me the people are dirty and that it is all outward show, that the interiors of the houses are very untidy—not a bath in any of the houses and no public baths like in Paris.

* American minister at The Hague.

AUGUST 20

very little work to do at present. I had to confess to father how I had been duped at Ostend. He said he hoped it was a lesson to me, but at once handed me five Napoleons.

AUGUST 28: THE HAGUE

A charming surprise. A Baron Constant Rébecque whose mother was born Gallatin, called to see father. They have a beautiful place in the country. He invited me to stop with him. Father cannot leave but accepted for me. I go there to-morrow.

SEPTEMBER 2

Came back from the Rébecque's this morning. It is a lovely place. I was sorry it was not the tulip season as they have many of them. We shot some hares and foxes; the latter, it seems, do a lot of damage. What would they say to this in England, where a fox is sacred? Must say the Dutch nobility are delightful, so simple and cordial. I felt at home at once. Madame de Rébecque is so pleased to see anybody of her name. She said father could not spare the time to go and see her she would go to the Hague to see him. I find all what we call "hot cakes" in America are of Dutch origin. We have "waffles" and "griddle cakes" every day for breakfast. Dutch girls are not pretty. They say they make good wives. I am not surprised as they cannot have any other temptations. Two, Mlle von Briennen and Mlle Bentinck, all round and fat.

THE HAGUE

Hard work now. It seems they laugh at the idea of an indemnity, which annoys father very much. He feels the mission is quite useless. We will soon go back to Paris. I am delighted, as it is not gay here.

the King's livery. Huge cors de chasse, which they thrust their heads through as one does through a life-preserver; at every opportunity possible they blow blasts of these latter. When a poor "piggy" was killed his remains were cheered by a lively tune played on the last six of the horns; still it is an amusement for me. There were several ladies of Court in the Royal Costume at Chasse, which really made a beautiful scene. I expected every moment to see the curtain come down as it does in the play. I believe in the time of Louis XIV they viewed the hunt in huge gilt and painted coaches.

SEPTEMBER 6

I stopped until the end of October at Fontainebleau and am now again installed in the Rue de l'Université. Life is very gay. I love the boulevards—so gay and everybody seems so cheerful. What a light-hearted people the French are. I am glad to say mamma seems a little happier. I am sure she will end by liking Paris.

SEPTEMBER 9

We have had a sheaf of dispatches from home, which we have to go through and copy. No wonder my handwriting is becoming illegible, my fingers are so cramped. The Caumont la Forces have a large supper to-night to which we are bidden. It has been so dull and cold all day, I think we are going to have a downfall of snow.

SEPTEMBER 10

We could hardly get home from the la Forces last night. It had rained a little and then came a frost making the streets like glass; in fact, they call it ver glas. The coachman and footman had to get down and lead the horses. I did also, and could hardly keep my own footing. Fortunately, the horses had been roughed. We were two hours doing a journey which ordinarily takes less than half an hour. Father has sent to Geneva for a fine gold watch for me for my Christmas present. He certainly spoils me.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1817

I often wonder if anybody got hold of my diary after I am dead what an ass they would think me. I will leave strict instructions to burn it. Frances and I are both learning a new dance, the "Schottische." It is very pretty and quite the fashionable rage.

NOVEMBER 20

I was presented to a Madame Chapelle last night at the opera. She is a daughter of the Regent Orléans and Madame de Genlis. She is not pretty but has great charm of manner—a grande dame. She has asked me to call on her. She receives on Friday evening. They say all Paris goes to her. Mamma allowed me to take Frances for a walk on the boulevard yesterday. She is so young it does not make any matter; were she eighteen it would be impossible. Fancy the customs of different countries. Here we are hemmed in by Etiquette. I have a bad toothache and am going to bed.

NOVEMBER 21

I waked this morning and my right cheek felt as if it were going to burst. I got up and looked in the mirror. Horrors, I did not recognize myself! I cannot see my right eye and my cheek is like an apple-dumpling. I am going to send for some leeches. I sent Lucien for my breakfast. Of course mamma thought I was ill and arrived with her medicine-chest. She said in any case a powder would do me good. I put my foot down firmly and said I would not take one. She left the room saying, "It is all biliousness." As if a swollen face was bile! She does annoy me. She even asked me what I had been eating.

NOVEMBER 25

My face quite normal again and I went out to-day. It was very cold, so I thought it best to go quietly and see the Laflage of the opera. She had a great wood-fire, and I showed her how to make toast as we do in America. I did not go home until she had to go to the opera. She was in the ballet and did not have to leave until 8 o'clock. I got home in time for supper, found the kitchen chimney on fire, a great crowd, and a "file" passing buckets all the way from the Seine up one side and down the other. It was soon put out. Very little damage done but all the supper ruined. We had to make the best of it, and ate cake and bread and milk.

DECEMBER 1

Ready preparations are being made for Christmas. We are going to have a Christmas party. I proposed bobbing for apples and snap-dragon. For once my family approved of my idea. We are going to have a very young party for Frances. Mamma enjoys arranging this sort of thing. I am trying to think of something new to amuse them. I proposed kiss-in-the-ring and hunt-slipper. Mamma vetoed both as improper—so voilà.

DECEMBER 8

Last night a splendid ball at Court. Mamma was very nice: all Madame de Gallatin-Vaudenet's jewels—which were all poor father inherited from her; in fact, he had voluntarily paid all her immense debts—also some fine ones. Mamma's train was purple velvet with white lace. The diamonds are all mounted in Louis XV settings. The huge aigrette with briolet diamonds in her turban, which was of gold tissue. On her forehead a ferronnière of diamonds—beautiful brooches. Her dress was gold and purple striped tissue. The Landgrave of Hesse Cassel gave Madame Gallatin-Vaudenet most of the jewels.

The Duchesse d'Angoulême was regal in white with train entirely of ermine. She was absolutely covered with jewels—pearls and diamonds. She is the most royal-looking personage one can possibly imagine. It was dreadfully crowded. All was over at midnight.

DECEMBER 12

I have decided on my surprise for our Christmas party. I am having a huge imitation plum-pudding made of cardboard. It is large enough to hold a little girl of ten dressed as a fairy. She will distribute flowers and sweets. Each package is to have a small flag on it; the flags are to be of all nations.

DECEMBER 15

Nothing but balls every night. I am quite worn out. Fortunately there is hardly any work to be done for father, or I would have to go to bed early.

DECEMBER 24

All is now ready for our Christmas party. The ball-room looks very nice, and I keep even the stable men frottéing to get the floor in fine condition. Supper is to be before we dance and play our jeux d'innocence. Frances is so excited, we will not let her see anything of our preparation. I tell her unless she keeps quiet she will have a red nose.

DECEMBER 26

Everything went off capitally. After supper, which was 8 o'clock, we started our game. Snap-dragon, a novelty, was a great success. We were allowed to play kiss-in-the-ring, suppressing the kiss; it was like "Hamlet" minus the Prince of Denmark. Of course, it was mamma. My plum-pudding was even a surprise to mamma. At 11 o'clock I had a great bell rung. In marched four footmen carrying the pudding on high. I took a great knife as if to cut it, and, pulling a string at the same time, it fell open. The little fairy was so dainty. I had her taught some verses called "Noel," which she declaimed as only a child can. After the little packages were distributed, we danced a contre-danse. The young girls were all so pretty I wanted to kiss them all. The poor little child who was in the plum-pudding burst into tears and would not be comforted. She wanted her mother, who is only a dresser at the opera, and who was to call for her at midnight, not being able to leave her work before then. Mamma took her on her lap and comforted her until she fell asleep from sheer exhaustion. When her mother did arrive, father, with his usual kindness, sent her home in a coach which he had ordered. All the young people loaded her with bon-bons, &c. I gave her a great big doll which I had bought for the purpose. She will be happy when she wakes to-morrow morning.

JANUARY 1, 1818: NEW YEAR'S DAY

After we had all drunk each other's health in egg nog I went out to commence the New Year—I fear badly. I don't think I'll record in my diary where I went.

.

JANUARY

A delightful dinner and sauterie at the Pictet de Rochment's. He is the Bavarian chargé d'affaires and a connexion of father's. Mlle Pictet, who brought father up in his early days, was his aunt. Pozzo di Borgo, Comte and Comtesse de Grotz (Hanover), Marquis and Marquise Alfieri (a descendant of the great Italian poet—he represents Sardinia here), Count and Countess Goltz (he represents Prussia), and the Chevalier Stuart, as they call him here, the English Ambassador—in fact, quite a diplomatic gathering. For the sauterie, Comte and Comtesse de Gallatin, who brought their two daughters, the Prince and Princesse Castelcicala (Deux Sicèles), the Baillet-Latours, Comte and Comtesse Caumont la Force, the Galitzins. and many others. There was a pavane dance by six young men and six ladies, a contre-danse and several "minuets," then a "Roger de Coverley" proposed by the English Ambassadors; but few knew the dance, but on once seeing the four first couples they quickly acquired it and acquitted themselves very well amongst much laughter. When there is a gathering of young people of this kind it is much gayer. Even father, Pozzo di Borgo, and the Chevalier Stuart joined in the dance. I had for partner Katinka Galitzin. My newly acquired "pigeon's wings" were much applauded. We supped at midnight. Mamma slept in the coach going home.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1818

JANUARY 6

Splendid skating on the petit lac, which was reserved. I got home just in time to dress to go to a twelfth-night party at Comtesse de Gallatin's. After cutting the gâteau du roi, Puységur drew the bean in his bit and Mlle Caumont la Force found the other one. They were duly clothed in red velvet mantles trimmed with ermine, gold paper crowns on their heads, and they were the reigning king and queen for the evening. It was put to the vote for the Court places. I was voted to be the Court fool and wore a fool's cap. As I considered it an insult, I determined to fool to my heart's content. After the king and queen had been escorted in state to their throne the revels commenced. Minuets, pavaues, mazurkas, were danced in rapid succession. Supper was announced at 11 o'clock. I slipped out unobserved, got hold of one of the footmen (whose palm I greased), and got him to get me a large foot-tub full of warm water; this I had placed facing the throne. I enlisted the aid of two of my cronies, placed a chair on either side of the tub, covering the whole with a quilt which I got my footman to procure for me. Seating my friends, one on one side and one on the other, I told them that sudden death would overtake them if they ared to move. I returned to the supper-room looking perfectly innocent. We then escorted the king and queen back to their respective thrones. I craved their majesty's permission to try a rebel for lèse majesté. They at once granted my fool's request. I then told the trumpeter to sound three times, and the herald to call upon Monsieur d'Osmond* to appear before their majesties to be tried and sentenced. Osmond is full of his own importance. He approached, and was told by me to seat himself between the two guards. I had told them the moment he did so to at once rise; this they did, and plump went Osmond into the bath. It really succeeded better than I had anticipated. He did not at first realize he was sitting in the water, but when he did he tried to get out of the tub, making an awful splashing; I never heard so much laughter. Poor Osmond stood dripping, a sorry figure and raging; the more he raged, the more we all laughed. When early in the evening I was voted to be the fool, he had said in his horrid sarcastic way, "That rôle exactly fits you." I could not refrain from going up to him and saying, "You now have a rôle that suits you like a bathing-dress." You see, on the Jour des Rois nobody must lose their temper, so he had to grin and bear it. He went in the kitchen to be dried but did not appear again. My cousin, Count Gallatin, tried to look serious and, taking me by the ear, reprimanded me, saying, "That was quite sufficient to cause war between France and America." I answered, "For the evening I am a fool, and it was a fool's prank." Anyhow, no more was said about it, and I think all enjoyed the joke.

JANUARY 9

We had a very large supper-party last night, but extremely dull. It may have been very intellectual, it undoubtedly was, but my intellect was not sufficiently cultivated to appreciate it; but I saw how happy father was and that quite resigned me to my fate. Poor mamma did not understand a word of the general conversation, but kept nodding her head and smiling in the most intelligent manner until I feared the feathers would fall out of her turban. Monsieur de Lafayette gave a long harangue on the subject of liberty. I think father was a little uneasy, as it does not do for people to express their opinion too openly at an embassy. Pozzo only laughed at the whole thing. Our silver, which was the service of poor General Moreau, made a very fine show. Mamma has great taste—the flowers and fruit on the table were beautifully arranged. Madame Récamier recited some poems in the most affected and stilted style. I really think she humbugs herself; she loves to hear the sound of her own voice. Count D'Orsay was the only amusing person. He made a violent speech on the political questions of the day, without head or tail, beginning or end; I rather loved him for it. After all the guests had retired I was off to a bal masqué at the opera—had lots of adventures, made at least a dozen rendezvous, and by now have forgotten both places and names. Telle est la vie.

* Monsieur d'Osmond, son of the Marquis d'Osmond and brother of the Comtesse de Boigne.

FEBRUARY 3

A great sensation has been produced by the appearance of a pamphlet printed in London and called "The Manuscript of St. Helena." It is supposed to have been written by the Emperor himself. It is read in all the great salons, and many say they recognize the style of the Emperor. Monsieur Naville (father's cousin) brought it to him yesterday from the author, who is Monsieur Lullin de Chateaufvieux, also a cousin and a Genevan. We are all sworn to secrecy. This makes it most amusing for me, as I hear of nothing else in all the salons I frequent and often have a good laugh to myself. A most extraor-

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

person who I must here give a place to is the
of Sweden, wife of Bernadotte. She was a Mlle Désirée Clary.* Her sister Julie married Joseph te. They were the daughters of a tallow-chandler Milles. She has left Sweden as she says the climate agree with her. Her position here is a curious private note was sent to all the ambassadors ministers of foreign Powers not to receive her as of Sweden but simply as Madame Bernadotte. not received officially at Court, but still the King her as Madame Bernadotte in private. I have in several different salons—a most common-person, with a loud voice and coarse manners, dressed in clothes you expect to see a cook wear.
a strong Marseilles accent. When I was pre-to her she said in horrible French: "Comment, s Américain et vous n'êtes pas noir. Ma sœur été en Amérique." She would be better if she back—she has some sort of eruption on her face is not nice to look at. Another extraordinary is the Duchesse de Duras; she is quite as ugly ame Bernadotte. Since the death of Madame l she seems to think the latter's mantle has n her shoulders. She apes her as much as she Instead of a small laurel-branch which Madame always carried in her hand and gesticulated with (mentioned this before), she has long bits of paper he twirls about and tears to pieces; it's most to watch her. Her daughter, the Princesse mont, a widow, has lately married a Monsieur ejacquelin, much against her mother's wishes.
I am drifting into a serious love affair. At several I have met a handsome Spanish woman, wife of ie-Désirée Clary, wife of Jean Bernadotte, who was elected royal of Sweden in 1810, succeeded the King Charles XII in named as Charles XIV. He was never recognized by the King

a Secretary of Embassy; she is several years older than I am and does not live happily with her husband. She has asked me to meet her at out-of-the-way places; I have been weak enough to do so, but I must break it off. It would be a serious matter for me and for father's position if there were any scandal, particularly in the diplomatic circle.

Serious talk of the resignation of Monsieur de Richelieu; father seems worried. Monsieur Decazes is spoken of. The King has shown him great favour lately. This means that father will have to begin all over again. Nothing definite has been settled with Monsieur de Richelieu. Our Government is pressing and seems to think it is father's fault.

We are in a very unsettled state on account of the approaching change in the Government. So many different rumours. General Dessolles spoken of as the new leader. Father hardly thinks this possible, but believes Monsieur Decazes will certainly (if not actually in name) be the leader. Prince Talleyrand is now in Paris; he is such an intriguer, so absolutely false, that nobody trusts him. I heard a good story about him yesterday and his astuteness. When he was in power a gentleman, accompanied by a small suite, presented himself at his house as the Margrave of C., a German princeling. His credentials were all in order, but Talleyrand suspected there was something wrong from the man's demeanour. Nevertheless, he invited him to dinner—putting him, as his rank demanded, on his right hand at table. When dinner was at an end and olives were passed with the wine, the Margrave took a fork to eat his with. At once Talleyrand clapped his hands, a prearranged signal, saying in a loud voice, "Arrest this impostor. No gentleman eats olives with a fork." Several officers disguised as footmen rushed forward and seized him. His suite immediately rose and tried to escape from the room, but they were also arrested.

Talleyrand was quite right; he afterwards learned that the Margrave of C. had been waylaid on his way to Paris, stripped of his clothes, baggage and papers, and left with his suite penniless. The fine gentleman and his band took the Margrave's coach and made use of the relays, so arriving in Paris. The poor Margrave wandered about for some time, as nobody would believe his story and thought he was an impostor. Another story is not out of place here. One day Talleyrand, who is very malformed, pointing to a particularly tall and handsome footman, said to the lady next to him, "That is the way we make them, and this is the way they make us."

Mamma is in despair, as father hates entertaining. He only cares to see his old friends—Lafayette, La Place, the Humboldts, Pozzo di Borgo, &c. They continually dine and sup with us. I have my own amusements, so it does not affect me. I am beginning to find out that all the Court and official functions are a great bore; they are all the same thing over and over again. The exceptions are the entertainments at the Elysée and the Palais Royale. The Duc and Duchesse de Berri are so gay and cheerful that they instil life into all. At the Palais Royale it is so informal; although very fine entertainments, one is not hedged in by that eternal etiquette as at the Tuilleries. The Duke and Duchess d'Angoulême are so formal and sad—Monsieur so repellent in his cold, stiff way, though they say he can be charming if he chooses. The poor old King is far more gracious; he really seems to enjoy father's society, and certainly shows him great favour. He laughingly said to him the other day, "I wish you would give us French lessons and we will give you English ones." Poor father's French accent is so strong in English. I sincerely believe it is one of the reasons he is so disliked in America, and it is a great drawback in political life. He is certainly in his right place here, but I think he longs for a more active life.

JULY

He has accepted a special mission to England; it is a very important one. The terms settled at the Treaty of Ghent expire in 1819, so all has to be reconsidered and settled afresh. He is the only person capable of carrying through these negotiations on account of his intimate knowledge of all details. Mr. Rush is our Minister in England. Father discovered him and had him put in his present position. He has most kindly extended his hospitality to us. Father has availed himself of his kind offer to stop at his house when in London. We expect to leave here in July. I fear London will be very dull after Paris, but I will have plenty of work to do. Father insists upon having a copy of every document and prefers me to make them. Albert dislikes Paris so much he is to go back to America this summer. He only cares about birds, animals, and so forth, and likes a wild solitary life. Frances promises to be pretty, and I hope she will grow up so and make a good marriage either here or in England. Her religion will be a great obstacle to her here, and if she changed it mamma would promptly give up the ghost. I am quite certain she will never be content to live in America, and I am sure I won't.

JULY 24

To-day we received the faire-part of the Duc de Guiche, the eldest son of the Duc de Gramont, with Mlle D'Orsay, the daughter of the Count and Countess D'Orsay. Made-moiselle is quite lovely and de Guiche is very handsome; they will make a brave couple. I have seen a great deal of de Guiche but not dans le grand monde. I suppose now he will settle down and we will see him no more. The contract of the marriage was on the 10th. Very beautifully done. Masses of flowers everywhere—from the chandelier great wreaths of roses; the wall lights were connected by huge garlands of pink roses. Count D'Orsay is famous for his taste. The wedding was in the Sainte-Chapelle by special permission of the King. The Duc and Duchesse de Berri were present and signed the register. The corbeille de mariage was superb; there were over five hundred presents. I think there is what may be called hot blood in the de Gramont family. There was a Comte de Guiche in the seventeenth century who was a lover of Queen Henrietta Maria, wife of Charles I. He was exiled, and on his return compromised himself with Mlle de la Vallière, the King's mistress; was exiled a second time. Not bad. The sister of the present Duc de Grammont married Lord Tankerville. She was quite lovely.

AUGUST: LONDON

After all, we did not leave Paris until August 10 and arrived in London on the 16th. Mr. Rush is most kind; he has placed the whole second floor of his house at our disposal. Of course London is quite empty and dull. I have plenty of work to do. Father has had several interviews with Lord Castlereagh, who is most conciliatory, but Mr. Frederic Robinson (now President of the Board of Trade) and Mr. Goulburn are the principal Commissioners. The former, as always, is delightful, and father likes dealing with him. The questions to be settled are the Fisheries, the Boundary Question, the West India Trade, and the Captured Slaves. Mr. Robinson begs father to put in writing exactly what his demands are and his reasons for making them; he thinks this will expedite matters. There are daily conferences, and from what I can understand an agreement satisfactory to all parties will soon be come to. Lord Castlereagh is very advanced in his ideas and has no insular prejudices. Mr. Robinson the same. Mr. Goulburn is not quite as enlightened as they are, but all is very amicable and pleasant.

SEPTEMBER 10

I had found it so dull, and not feeling very well, 'father insisted upon sending me to Brighton for two weeks. I arrived yesterday, and at once went to the Pavilion and paid my respects to the Prince Regent. These were father's orders. He is here with some of his dandies and his last reigning favourite. I am very comfortably lodged not far from the sea, in James Street. The Pavilion is a most extraordinary place—Moorish, I think, in architecture; all sorts of domes and minarets. There is a huge riding-school where the Regent takes exercise in bad weather. They say the cost of the building was something enormous. I only went into the first hall and wrote my name. The decorations are Oriental and dazzling, but, although I am informed to the contrary, I should not think the remainder of the decorations are in good taste.

SEPTEMBER 12

Such perfect weather, I feel much better already; the heat in London was very great. I had so much writing to do that now I want simply to rest. I was out all the morning lying on the shingle basking in the sun. Returned at 2 o'clock to my dinner. The air here gives me a fine appetite, otherwise I should not be able to eat the food they give me; it's like all English food, heavy and greasy. When will they learn what cooking is? In any small inn in France they give you an appetizing meal, well seasoned and well served. For instance, for dinner to-day I had salt boiled beef with carrots and dumplings; the beef was hard, the carrots were harder, and the dumplings I could have thrown against the door without breaking them; but still I was hungry and managed to make a good dinner. This afternoon, when I went for a walk I met the Prince Regent driving in a most gorgeous chariot; it seemed to me every colour of the rainbow. He was accompanied by a lady, but I do not now who she was—in fact, I don't know anybody in England. Several gentlemen accompanied him on horseback. The Prince looked very red as if he had been drinking; they were all very noisy. Mr. Brummell was a great friend of the Prince's; he was called the "mirror of fashion," and although of very humble birth, he managed to work his way to the higher society, and all through his wit and his manner of dressing. He was for a long time the arbiter of fashion. They tell me he often used to destroy a dozen white neckcloths before he used them to suit him. The Regent used to imitate him though he was most insolent; he was known as "Beau Brummell."

SEPTEMBER 15

Lucien has afforded me great amusement ever since he left Paris. I asked him if he was a good sailor. Mais oui, Excellence. Now he had never even seen the sea, but I said nothing and awaited events. Full of luck, he marched on board the packet at Boulogne. We were barely under way when I lost sight of him. On arrival at Dover no Lucien could be found. At last, after a search in the fore-castle in one of the sailor's bunks, there was a helpless and limp mass. He was carried on deck, and after having brandy poured down his throat began to revive. His first words were: "Est-que je suis mort?" But with the wonderful elasticity of the French nature, before we got to Sevenoaks he was cheerfully chatting with father's man in the rumble. London astonished him; he could not understand the dirty streets or the grimy houses. He was comically miserable—so homesick that at one time father contemplated sending him home, but he would not consent to this, saying, "What would monsieur do without him?" He certainly is devoted to me. Here at Brighton he is much happier. He is a very good-looking lad. Yesterday I actually saw him walking arm-in-arm with a very pretty girl. As he cannot speak two words of English, I cannot understand how he managed it. Oh, but the language of love is not difficult, and I fear he has taken a leaf out of his master's book.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1818

SEPTEMBER 17

I had a little adventure yesterday which I hope will turn out well. Nobody knows me here, so I really don't care what I do. I noticed the day after I arrived a very pretty woman. There is a certain look that one gives to a pretty woman and which I have always found a woman understands. The second time I found her walking alone she dropped her eyelids, but not till after she had had a good look at me. After passing her I turned and followed her, dropping my pocket-handkerchief (I always carry a lady's handkerchief with me as I have found it such a help in making acquaintances). I ran after her saying, "Madame, I think this must be yours?" She looked at it and said, "Oh, how stupid of me," and with a pretty curtsy she quietly put it in her reticule; then she said, "I see you are a stranger here." Of course I poured out all my woes, telling her I did not know a soul in the place. She took compassion on me and has promised to meet me to take a little walk to-morrow evening.

SEPTEMBER 19

My inamorata is charming, she is married to an old man who is in the city in business—she is down here with a younger sister, to recoup the latter's health. She has promised to meet me to-morrow and to take me home to supper—her sister goes to bed at 7 o'clock.

SEPTEMBER 20

The worst possible luck—this morning I received a command from the Prince Regent to attend a concert at the Pavilion to-night—what am I to do? I do not know my fair lady's name or where she is lodged. She will never ive me—I cannot tell her the real reason of my not g able to keep the rendezvous. She thinks I am ly a young American travelling for my health.

TEMBER 21

most gorgeous entertainment at the Pavilion; as I red rows of lacqueys in Royal liveries and floured ls lined the hall. A most magnificent and impor-person asked my name with a profound bow—motioned to two lacqueys who threw open the doors and as ushered into a gorgeous saloon. A gentleman adced and said his Royal Highness would receive in a few minutes, which he did. I was escorted to a ller saloon, at the far end of which the Prince was reclining on a divan. He was most gracious and ired kindly about father—he also asked me e questions about the Royal Family in Paris, parlarly about the Duc de Berri. While he was talking ne the doors were thrown open and several ladies gentlemen came in; the Regent rose and with the aid wo sticks and followed by the Court, in which I joined, ceeded to the Concert Saloon. He was seated in the re in a large gilt arm-chair with a lady either side of
—I was in the second row. I do not know who the gentlemen were who were on either side of me, one knew my name and both of them seeing I was ng and feeling a little bashful and a little embarrassed le themselves most agreeable to me and soon put me ny ease. What astonished me very much was when one of the performers, either male or female, did not se the Prince he expressed his displeasure in a loud e, much to their mortification—and he is called “The t Gentleman in Europe.” When the concert was r, bowing to us all he retired, with several ladies and tlemen. We were then conducted to the dining-hall, ch is very fine. A very lavish buffet supper was red, a fine display of gold plate—some of the gentlemen were half drunk while they were at the concert and when I left after midnight several of them were helplessly so, a disgusting sight and one that is never seen in France, even in Bohemian society. Some of the decorations of the Pavilion are very fine; the chandeliers are huge dragons painted in colours and gilded. What I liked the best were some beautiful wall-hangings of Chinese paper—I have never seen any before like them—but the whole effect of the furniture is vulgar, at least to my eyes, which are so accustomed to the refined taste of the French. Oddly enough I did not see a picture of any kind or description.

SEPTEMBER 22

I have been walking about all day and cannot find a trace of my belle dame. I sincerely regret it as I am leaving now in a few days and fear I will never see her again. I went to write my name at the Pavilion. Just as I was leaving the Prince's curricule drove up; of course I had to wait at the door for him to pass—he passed me without a sign of recognition—he was very red in the face, and, may I only breathe it—I fear he was drunk. They told me he had just come from a cock-fight.

SEPTEMBER 23

Not a sign of my fair lady—I so deeply regret it, and of course as I cannot find her, I want to see her all the more. I am leaving the day after to-morrow. Lucien did not come home last night, so my landlady informed me; I must talk to him.

SEPTEMBER 24

Still no sign. It is odd as Brighton is not a large place—it does seem odd. I fancied I knew the direction she lived in and have been haunting that quarter all the morning. We are off to-morrow, in one of the fast coaches—I will enjoy the drive. I am certainly feeling much better.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

DECEMBER 26: LONDON

Had a splendid journey up, racing another coach the way. I am glad to say we arrived first, the other had an accident. It's wonderful the rapidity with which they change the horses. We came by Cuckfield, an English village and the Weald of Sussex—lovely country. I thoroughly enjoyed it. Lucien followed with baggage—these fast coaches do not take any. I was rather as usual, calm and unruffled—he was very anxious to see me looking so well. Mr. Rush had a dinner-party but excused me from appearing as I was fatigued.

DECEMBER 28

I was taken to White's Club and Brook's—I have never been into a club before; they say very high gaming takes place at night—as I have never touched a card in my life it does not interest me. Father has a great deal of gambling and gamblers. I have been putting my papers in order this evening. London is absolutely empty. Everybody is in the country shooting.

DECEMBER 29

Went to-day to Chelsea Marshes with Mr. Compton; he took guns but there was nothing to shoot—he says there was very good snipe-shooting later on. To-morrow I am going to the Tower of London. We will be going back to Paris very shortly—another dinner-party—all men much older than myself. When the card was put on the table I begged to be excused and went to bed.

DECEMBER 1

Charlotte it is rumoured is very ill—she is suffering from dropsy; it seems she has a violent temper and when she has an outburst it brings on spasms which they fear will cause her death at any moment. The Duchess of Devonshire is devoted to her and hardly ever leaves her.

very sad with her poor mad husband. She goes to see every day but he never recognizes her—he always says he is holding a Court and talks incessantly to every people whom he thinks surround him; what a death! One of the first signs of his coming was one day a large pasty of blackbirds was served on the Royal table, covered with a thick crust. When he cut he remarked: “How very extraordinary; how could the earth did those blackbirds get in that dish?” He would not allow it to be served and had some clever physician sent for to go into the matter.

SEPTEMBER 2

Dined with Lord Castlereagh last night, only men and women—everything fine—we were over three hours at the conversation was far above me, although I take no interest in politics. Father thinks this all does credit and no doubt he is right. We leave on the 10th. I don't like England or English customs and manners.

Many meetings and it seems to me endless discussions—the result is as follows:—The articles on impressment and maritime rights are thrown out, a ten years' truce to cover the Fisheries question, the boundary between the Lake and the Rocky Mountains, also the use of the Columbia River; indemnity for the slave trade and the renewal of the commercial treaty of 1815. The Emperor has been most generous in every way and has done his best to conciliate all—Lord Castlereagh has worked in perfect accord with him. The question of the Mississippi is settled for ever. With respect to the West India trade, Mr. Robinson made concessions and father met him half-way. On the minor points in dispute little was settled—Lord Castlereagh said, “Time will do much more than we can”; Father absolutely agrees. Since the Treaty of Ghent the American people are a little swelled with pride, which he thinks in time will wear away. We return to Paris very shortly. I shall not be sorry, as it has been desperately dull and very hard work.

OCTOBER 10: DOVER

We left London, I without regret, this morning; we hope to cross to-morrow but it is blowing great guns and the packet did not leave to-day; the French one did as there is a good harbour here. At Boulogne it is sometimes impossible to land. I feel sorry for poor Lucien, he is pea-green in anticipation—I cannot boast much myself, but I am getting used to it.

OCTOBER 11

Still here on account of stress of weather. It does not affect us as we are not in a hurry, as there is nothing for us to do in Paris at present. I visited the Dover Castle—it is on a very high down above the town. It was very interesting—I could hardly keep my feet the wind was so violent.

OCTOBER 12

We embarked this morning, the wind has moderated considerably and the Channel looks quite calm, the sun is shining and we can see Cape Gris Nez distinctly—Lucien is quite cheerful.

OCTOBER 14

We sleep at Amiens to-night.

OCTOBER 18, 1818: PARIS

We returned here on the 16th. Mother is still in the country but returns shortly.

OCTOBER 19

Mamma and Frances returned to-day both looking so well. I have for the last few days been visiting all my old haunts to see if they were still there. We will soon have to return to fashionable life. The Court has returned, and Paris looks very gay.

OCTOBER 22

I even love the smell of Paris. I love the smell of the fruit and vegetables which the market-women hawk about the streets in their push-carts. I love the cry "Oh, les belles fraises. Oh! les raisins, dix sous la livre," and later, "Oh! la valence, la belle valence." Dear Albertine de Broglie came to see mamma to-day; they have bought a beautiful hotel, quite close to us. They have a fine boy; she wants us to dine quite en famille on Sunday—that is mamma, father, Frances and myself. Mamma could not refuse her, but it is the first time she has dined out on Sunday since we came to Paris.

OCTOBER 25

We had such a pleasant dinner at the de Broglie's. Their hotel is really beautiful. He had superb pictures and furniture, silver, &c.; her mother left her all she possibly could, so it all makes a fine show. The precious baby was brought down before dinner. Of course mamma and Frances made a great fuss over it. I am not an expert in babies, they always look so crumpled and red to me and I never know how to pick them up. We saw a fine portrait of de Broglie's father who was guillotined in the Revolution. She showed it to us. It is covered with a black curtain which she drew aside when he was out of the room, as he cannot bear to look at it. This is the reason I suppose he is so serious.

OCTOBER 29

I am really beginning to vegetate. I will get prematurely old, if I go on at this rate. I am going to-night with Puységur to a ball given by a lady of the "other world." The Duc de Berri protects her and will be there. I have just come in from a turn in the Bois de Boulogne where I met many friends whom I had not seen since I had returned from England. The men all wanted to know about the English fashions as everything is à l'Anglaise now in France. Certainly Englishmen are better dressed than Frenchmen. I met Count D'Orsay; he is certainly a fine figure of a man and carries himself so well. His handsome face is rather spoilt by his teeth, which although very white are very much separated, which gives his mouth an animal look when he smiles.

NOVEMBER

Very cold and in the mornings we have a thick white fog. I am fully lancé dans le monde again, dancing every night. The ball at the Duc de Berri's friend was very enjoyable, but oddly enough up to a certain point the behaviour was even more dignified than dans le vrai monde. It was not until after supper and the Duc had retired that things became rather mixed. I know about 3 A.M. I was sitting on the lap of a lady, who displayed ample charms, and she was calling me her "Bébé, petit choux," &c. I did not stop there long—I prefer lamb to mutton.

NOVEMBER 1818

Christmas will soon be here. For the first time we are to dine out at the de Broglie's. She made such a point of it. We are going to have a New Year's Eve party.

.

Of course, I am in another scrape—the same old story. At Madame Récamier's. She is short, has the most beautiful auburn hair, is an Austrian by birth, married to a Frenchman. She swears eternal devotion—I do the same but do not mean it in the least. It is, I hope, only a passing fancy. Her husband neglects her, so she says —but will meet him to-morrow as she has bidden me to a large dinner-party. We went last night to the opera. Mamma took Frances for the first time. She was delighted, it was a pleasure to see her so happy.

NOVEMBER 16

Some most important dispatches have arrived from America which will keep me busy for a long time. Father frets a little that he has not more important work to do. He is writing on finance, which keeps him very busy. We have a dinner to-night, all Americans. Mamma is so pleased as she then can join in the general conversation. It must be very hard for her when only French is spoken.

DECEMBER 1818

There is no doubt that the Duc de Richelieu will resign. He has been attacked in the most unseemly manner by the party headed by Monsieur Decazes. The New Cabinet has been formed led by Decazes.

Mamma came back for Christmas from Fontainebleau; we were very quiet as one of her sisters has died in America—which had placed us in mourning.

I am sorry to say I cannot get rid of Madame S. She will not leave me alone. Something must be done to bring about a rupture. The New Year may bring me some luck.

JANUARY 3, 1819

As everybody does, I have made all sorts of good resolutions for 1819. I do not suppose I'll keep one of them. The new Government seems very obstinate, re the Indemnity claims—always some excuses, something cropping up to delay the settlement. Poor Monsieur de Richelieu, the most simple of men, has inspired Madame Bernadotte (the Queen of Sweden) with a violent passion; she follows him like a dog, her carriage waits outside his door her coachman whips up his horses and follows. M. de Duras also causes much amusement, she does not conceal her jealousy of Madame Récamier, who has stolen M. de Chateaubriand from her. Really these intrigues and their love affairs are too funny!

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

JUNE 10

There is much scandal about the treatment the Duke of Angoulême has received at the hands of the Royal Family. Under him he has stood it so long. Monsieur has at times been most insolent. Father has decided to go to Geneva for three months. He has taken a house called "Bois de Pregny." There is really nothing to keep us in Paris.

Mr. Sheldon and the staff are quite sufficient. I left Paris on June 1—Madame S. threatens to follow me there; if so, I will drown myself in the lake. Madame de Staël is in Geneva. I think I will ask her advice how I am to get rid of this woman—I must do something. The Chamber voted yesterday the grant of an income of 100,000 francs a year to the Duc de Richelieu—this has caused great satisfaction in all quarters; he is not a rich man but has proved his devotion to his country. Father went to congratulate him, I accompanied him. He was very much pleased, kissing father on both cheeks. They are all in great sympathy, as both are men of the same calibre: brave, honest, without fear of expressing their opinion or holding it, if they think they are right. Since I have been so continually with father, seeing how he attracts people to him—those whose friendship is worth having—I believe in magnetic influence, which he strongly possesses. When he shakes your hand you feel a thrill go through you. When he looks into your eyes, he seems to absorb your soul. The Duke lives in such a simple manner, with only two footmen in the ante-chamber. The Cabinet where he received us in was without a carpet, the floor of chairs and a very long table covered with black cloth. A carafe and a carafon of eau des fleurs d'oranges.

He never touches wine of any description. He engaged father to dine with him sans façon on February 3, to meet some of his (the Duke's) enemies. He said they were quite tame.

FEBRUARY 4

We dined yesterday with the Duc de Richelieu—that is father and myself. It was a curious company composed of most of his political opponents; as he had said they certainly were tame, much too tame for me—I was bored and glad to escape. First for a short time to the opera, nothing interesting there. I remembered it was Madame Récamier's reception evening, so hied myself there. Her salon is very beautiful, very classic, but not quite the place for me. If I were twenty years older I might take a mild dose of that sort of entertainment. I flew when I saw the majestic form of Madame de Boigne approaching—hid behind a portière to escape Madame de Duras and fell into the arms of Madame S. Of course then I knew what was in store for me. Bitter reproaches, why had I neglected her who had given her soul for me: I didn't want her soul. Well, it ended as it always does; she arranged her coach to stop at the corner of the Rue Bonaparte, which it did, I got in and accompanied her home. Bonsoir.

FEBRUARY 6

Father had a fainting seizure this morning which alarmed us all very much, as that sort of thing is so unusual with him—he enjoys such wonderful health. Mamma would burn feathers; Berthal wanted to drop a key down his back; this last proposition cured him I think, anyhow he sent everybody out of the room except mamma. I went for the leech and he was bled.

FEBRUARY 8

I am glad to say that father has entirely recovered from his indisposition. He thinks it was caused by a very strong and of segars he has smoked lately; he is going to change em. He was in one of his happiest moods at déjeuner day. He said that if anything was calculated to ng a person round who had fainted it was Madame rthal. Poor woman, she is not beautiful; she is very l and angular, has a distinct moustache, a very long and quisitive nose, a huge mole on her chin which is full of ir—which I am certain she puts in curl-papers at night but a wisp of hair on either side of her head; this is surounted by a monumental cap; having nothing to fasten to she balances it as a mountebank does a ball on his ad at a fair. I always have my hands ready to catch

Still I do not think we could dispense with her services she is invaluable. Lucien told me in confidence that she st her eagle eye on him, but as he did not reciprocate e transferred her affection to Albert's black Peter.
 hink this must be true as I certainly did hear a flutter d a squeak in the corridor one day. Berthal disappeared wn one staircase and Peter down the other. Mamma nks her a citadel of virtue, so I have not undeceived
 r. How fortunate we all can find some one to love or love us. What would life be without it?

FEBRUARY 10

There is a great scandal about the Orléans family and their relationship with the Court. The King snubs the Duke publicly on every occasion possible. At some Court nctions lately he has really refused him his proper ghts as a Bourbon prince. The Duchesse de Berri was ceinte but it came to nothing. After the Duc de erri, Orléans is the heir. I can quite understand the Duchesse d'Angoulême's dislike for the son of a man who oted for her parents' death. Twice lately the Duc de erri has invited me to supper. Not at the Elysées—s dames and most cheery they have been. The truth the Court is as dull as can be. Since the death of his father, the Prince de Condé, the Duc de Bourbon* has come to live in Paris. He retains his old name as he says he cannot live up to that of Condé. His whole life is a scandal, worse here than in London.

FEBRUARY 12

I have neglected to write for two days. It is really so difficult to find time. I make up my mind to write every night before going to bed, but as lately I have not been home until 3 or 4 A.M., it is the next day. This is a problem that my brain is too addled to probe. There was a grand défilé at Court on Sunday; always the same thing—very magnificent no doubt to anybody who has never seen it, but as we have to stand for such a long time it is most fatiguing. I don't see how father bears it. Mamma escapes it as she has been excused from attending any Court function on account of her religious principles. Monday the Carnival commenced; a lot of us made egregious asses of ourselves, but it amused us. We had pierrot costumes and each one a musical instrument. We supped with some of our operatic friends at the Maison Dorée; we did everything that was foolish. Puységur had much too much to drink and would pour all the coffee into the piano. We heated francs and sous in the fire and threw them out of the window and watched the poor devils scramble for them, only to burn their fingers. It may have been funny for us, but it was not for them—on calm reflection I think it was very cruel. Tuesday a small ball at the Palais Royal, which was very amusing. A great many English were present, one very handsome woman, Lady Westmoreland.† Her husband is in the Diplomatic Service. She is a very great friend of the Duke of Wellington's, also of Pozzo di Borgo. As there

* Louis Jean Joseph de Bourbon-Condé, son of the Prince de Condé.

† Priscilla Ann Willesley Pole, born 1793, Countess of Westmoreland, an intimate friend of the Duke of Wellington and Pozzo di Borgo, the Russian Ambassador.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

young people at the Elysée, Frances was allowed to go. enjoyed it immensely. She is so fresh and pretty, lovely neck and shoulders. I was very proud of Mamma has great taste and dresses her to perfection but with great simplicity. My diary is really very good. I must try to record more interesting matter.

JANUARY 14

We are now having difficulties with the Spanish-American colonies which are in revolt. Father thinks it of the greatest importance that no European Power should interfere in the quarrel. He feels he must be continually on the alert and keep himself informed on all matters concerning the subject. He also feels it of great importance that the United States should recognize the American Republics. On this subject he has written a private note to all the European Powers to prepare for the action to be taken by his Government so that it will not come as a surprise to them. The Congress at La Chapelle is now sitting. Its policy with regard to the United States is very favourable. Spain finds herself isolated by the Powers and is treating with father, at least through him for the sale of Florida. I have put up all gaieties at present as it is a serious matter, all private notes are drafted by me before being handed over to the Secretary of State. Spain has refused to ratify the treaty.

JANUARY 15

There has been a new revolution in Spain and a complete change in the Government. They have ratified the new constitution, much to father's satisfaction. He said to me that he felt more contented in doing something of importance, as for some time he had been idling away his time. Complications have also arisen with regard to the Treaty of Commerce with France which has lain dormant for some time. Father has now taken up the

FEBRUARY 16

As I am now pretty free from work, I have again started my vie de polichinelle, as mamma insists on calling it. Father always smiles when she says this as her pronunciation of the words is so funny.

FEBRUARY 17

The last days of the Carnival—a bal-masqué at the opera to-night.

FEBRUARY 19

I have really been too tired even to open my diary. I make such good resolutions, but once I get in the swim with my friends, off I go, like a champagne cork. I love amusing myself. I know very shortly I will have to settle down to some steady work. To-night we have arranged a very original car for the Carnival. We, the men of course, are carefully disguised, for it would never do for us to be recognized, particularly in the company we so much prefer. I am to be an apple, P. a pear, R. a peach, D. a carrot, G. a bunch of grapes, L. a fig. The ladies are each a different flower and the car is in the shape of a large gilt basket with a high handle hung with paper lanterns all in the shapes of fruits and flowers. We hope it will be a success.

FEBRUARY 21

Indeed we did have a success; we were cheered the whole length of the boulevards, but one unfortunate incident. Célestine of the honourable corps de ballet in her eagerness fell out of the basket; fortunately she fell on a fat woman or she might have been seriously injured. But I hold my breath when I recall the scene: she was dressed as a poppy, but I suppose by sheer forgetfulness she had forgotten to put on anything but the dress; or she may have wished it to be very realistic, and as poppies do not wear underclothes, she did not. The fat woman was so incensed that seizing her opportunity as Célestine was completely turned up, began to belabour her with her reticule on that portion of the body on which generally we receive punishment in our early childhood. We dragged poor C. more dead than alive back into the car. The reticule was of sharp steel beads. Célestine stood up for the remainder of the evening. The usual supper, &c. &c.

FEBRUARY 23

Ball at the Elysée last night—very brilliant as usual. The beautiful Lady Westmoreland came escorted by Pozzo di Borgo; she was much admired. The Duchesse de Berri was full of animation; she has an unfortunate way of moving, which is totally devoid of elegance or grace. She is more like a child. She will suddenly run up to the Duke and hang on his arm, no matter whom he may be in conversation with. The Orléans family is in full force, but oddly enough no other members of the Royal Family. I think it really made it more informal and far more enjoyable. I begged hard for mamma to allow Frances to go. I even enlisted father, but he said he left such matters to mamma, that they were far too grave for him to decide. I know all the same he would have wished Frances to enjoy herself. She is really too young.

MARCH

Now that Lent is here there will be more rest for me and I intend doing some serious reading. I have asked father to make a list of books that he thinks will be of benefit to me. He had a long letter from Madame Patterson Bonaparte to-day. She is in Rome, is evidently very well

MADAME PATTERSON BONAPARTE (THREE VIEWS)

By GILBERT STUART

By kind permission of the Countess Moltke-Huitfeldt, née Bonaparte received, particularly by all the members of the Bonaparte family. In most of her letters is asking his advice about investments for her savings. Her one god seems to be money. Father has the highest opinion of her intelligence—particularly on financial matters—she is so shrewd. He often has said had she met the Emperor Napoleon, and had joined forces with him, the fate of Europe might be quite different from what it is to-day. Mamma does not like her, but like the sensible woman she is, never commits herself; in fact she always refrains from expressing any opinion that may annoy father. They really are a model husband and wife. I do not see such another happy and contented couple anywhere. Among our relatives in Geneva I find them, but their lives are so simple, they are so unworldly, living only for their families. I suppose it is rather a selfish one, but still it has always struck me that it is the right life to lead. Moralizing now. Well it is Lent. What could I do better?

MARCH 1819

So little of interest to record. I have been trying to do my duty, and have been taking Frances to see all the fine churches, to the Luxembourg and various places of interest. I think it as well she should have something to talk about when she comes out in the world next year. Mamma has no idea of keeping her always at her side and not allowing her to talk to young men. It is really quite absurd the way French girls are brought up. How can they learn anything about the man they are to marry if they are never allowed even to see them without a duenna is present. Madame de Staël was so sensible on this matter. She allowed Albertine at Coppet to go for long walks with de Broglie, so that they would know each other before marriage. It certainly in this case is a success as I have never seen a happier couple in my life; they are a model to all young married people.

RIL

ch lovely weather. The trees are all breaking into f, all is so fresh. Really I think the spring is the best son. It has the same bloom of freshness like a young ld. I must really marry. I am sick of the thralldom Madame S. I have begun to dislike her. Of course, I ame myself, but still she was older than me. I am ite sick of this liaison. I have tried to break it on veral occasions but she makes such scenes, and as I a rather weak where women are concerned I always re in.

RIL 8

ere is much entertaining at present, but I am keeping ry quiet. I really have not felt at all well for some ae. My teeth have been giving me a great deal of uble. The dentist says it is from the fever I had in ussia and the intense cold there. I will be glad when get to the quiet of Geneva; I love going on the lake.
ther has a horror of my sailing. Two of his cousins the twenty-first birthday of the eldest went for a sail in new boat that had been given to the latter for his birth-y. Their house is actually on the lake on the way by the wer road to Pregny. The wind is very treacherous on the ke on account of the surrounding mountains. The boat psized in full view of both their father and mother and th of the lads were drowned before help could be tained to rescue them. By their death, father was t the last male of the Gallatin family.

RIL 20

was told such an interesting story to-day about Robert ulton.* It seems during the Terror he was in Paris;
shing to go to England on business he obtained a permit

* Robert Fulton (inventor), first steamboat on the Seine, Paris, August 9, 1803. At New York, 1807, started a steamboat, the Clermont, the Hudson River.

and passport. By accident it was made out for Mr. and Mrs. Fulton. Arriving at Calais he was detained as there was no packet crossing. In the evening at the auberge where he was lodged, he noticed a young woman who seemed in agony of mind—this was rather a common thing in those days. At last she summoned up courage to speak to him, saying, “I throw myself on your mercy. I see you are a foreigner. I escaped from Paris where I had foolishly gone to try and save some important documents. My husband would have gone but he is very ill in England and I persuaded him to allow me to do so. I am without a passport, and hardly dare to embark as there is a price on my head, and I am certain to be arrested and sent back to Paris. Can you help me?” Fulton said, “I will do my best. I have my American passport, oddly enough by error it was made out for myself and wife, but she is in America. If you are willing to pass as Mrs. Fulton, my wife, you are welcome to the little protection I can give you.” As the lady in question was disguised and very simply dressed the plan succeeded and with the deepest gratitude she parted with him at Dover, without revealing her name to him. Some years later when Fulton was in Paris trying to raise money to put his inventions into practice, he strolled one night into the Théâtre Français. Looking around the auditorium he spied, much to his astonishment, in one of the boxes the lady of his adventure splendidly dressed and covered with jewels; at the same time she recognized him and waved her fan to him, sending her husband at once to escort him to her box. It was through her all the money was found for him to carry out his great work. One rarely hears of such gratitude. It was the Duchesse de L.

APRIL

Mamma is in her element. We are most uncomfortable. Everything in the house is turned upside down, nothing but cleaning. There is but one room sacred and that er's, where I take refuge. Every window is open, light as well live in the street; fortunately we are Cour et Jardin. The concierge at the gate has to refuse admittance to all carriages. It is mamma's Verthal's carnival as we have taken a house near a for several months. We are taking some of the ts, the others we will procure there. The servants shortly as they go by diligence. We have hired a travelling carriage and will only take our body ts with us—that is, two maids, father's man and a. They will be stowed away in the rumble. It takes us over a week. I am not looking forward ave for Geneva to-morrow. I will be glad of the The life of a young man is a very gay one, burning ndle both ends.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

12

all when everything was packed, the travelling es engaged, father has some very important ches which will keep us here another two months. sorry for mamma and the servants who were going e their holidays. The house was all done up for mmer, now everything has to be uncovered and draught. The best part of it is, Madame S. had d to Aix en Savoi en route for Geneva. She will ous. She is quite capable of coming back. Still, have a short breathing time of freedom. We had d ourselves to so many people who had sent us ions that we will look very stupid. To console es, who was looking forward to our visit, I took her esnes; drove her in my curricule, hired a canoe and nt on the river. It was a glorious day, with that us smell of spring in the air. We started early and

I took something to eat, landed on an island and had a picnic. We had chicken and hard-boiled eggs, but we had forgotten the salt—it was stupid of Madame Berthal. She had put in some splendid peaches that we were going to take on the journey, they were good: it quite restored Frances to her usual gaiety. She and I are such good friends but she has got a temper of her own. I have none, I often wish I had. We did not get home until after sunset. I lost an oar, which delayed us. I think it must have been the peach juice which went to my head as we had nothing to drink stronger than barley-water with lemon. We were as happy as two children. I think I was the younger of the two.

NOVEMBER 1

We are now settled down at home, glad to get back. Father still doing his best to effect a settlement of the Indemnity claims, but it is an uphill task. Monsieur Decazes is far more difficult to deal with than the Duc de Richelieu. Paris very gay—balls every night. The King is far from well; we have no Court functions as yet. The Duchesse d'Orléans gave a splendid ball on the 4th; all the gardens illuminated—a fine sight. It seems the poor old King was really made ill by the discovery of a plot to make him abdicate in favour of Monsieur; although Monsieur denied all knowledge of it, he nevertheless was the instigator of it. We are having a large Christmas dinner—Americans, French, and English. Christmas is little kept by the French; New Year's Day is the great festival. The Carnival is very early this year, so the gaieties will go on. Both the Duc de Berri and the Duc d'Orléans have made great innovations. They said the Court was much too dull, so have invited all sorts and conditions, not only to parties but to dinners—savants, wits, deputies of all shades and colour.

CEMBER 8

The famous Abbé Grégoire* was turned out of the Chamber of Deputies yesterday. He certainly is an extraordinary mixture. It was he who proposed the abolition of royalty; he also demanded of the Assembly condemnation to death of Louis XVI. It was he who made the Assembly accord civil rights to the Jews and coloured people. He tried to oppose the great Napoleon in every way, but with little success.

I dined yesterday with the Comte and Comtesse Orsay. He is a wonderful fop but very witty. Some of his stories would make even a man blush, but he seems to be a privileged person. Sosthène de la Rochefoucauld was one of the guests—a person very full of his own importance. Also that terrible Madame de Boigne and her brother were among the guests; she tackled me after dinner, asking him all sorts of questions about manners and customs in America. I think he was a little wearied by her, as I heard him say to her, “Madame, when we have a social revolution in America we may have better manners, as you have.” She exclaimed, “You are not an American, you are one of us.” He answered, “Pardon me, I represent a young and great country of which I am justly proud.” She is really a brand.

CEMBER 8

Emma is preparing for Christmas: plum-puddings are being made. Madame Berthal looks utterly disgusted when she goes down to the kitchen to stir the puddings; so do the same and so does Frances. Father only laughed when we told him about it, and says, “Why not?” Madame Récamier has invited me to dinner for the 17th. I consider it a great honour as I am so young. Four notes lay from Madame S.—the first in despair, the second zing for being in despair, the third gay and frivolous, the fourth apologizing for being gay and frivolous. Will women write so much?—a dangerous habit. I went immediately into the fire. Hysterical I came from the housekeeper's room. I rushed out to see what was the matter. I met Berthal supporting Frances and trying to balance her head-dress. Frances was peeling some apples and had cut her finger; like the little goose that she is, she fainted at the sight of her blood. I looked at her hand and said, "What else, it's nothing!" As she passed she gave me a kick. She has inherited something from mamma. No supper. No time to write any more.

The Abbé Grégoire, born December 4, 1750, died April 28, 1831.

DECEMBER 18

A very amusing dinner at Madame Récamier's, followed by a very funny little lampoon on the Queen of Sweden; it was called Trouvez-moi, mon Homme. It was really clever and well acted. Madame de J. represented the unfortunate queen, and I really thought at first it was the Bernadotte in person. Some music followed. The lady with ample and bulging charms—in fact, plump everywhere—played the harp. Her arms were covered with mutton; both arms were covered with jingling bells. This, perhaps, was fortunate, as it sounded like high-bells with the occasional breaking of a string and the snapping of a whip. When she had finished there was a string left on the harp.

DECEMBER 19

The Duc de Coigny has invited me to Fontainebleau for a few days. He is the governor of the château and has a beautiful house. I am certain to enjoy myself.

DECEMBER 20

A very large party, all men—Mathieu de Montigny, the Duc de Serent, the Prince de Poix, the marquis de Champonet, and a host of others. I drove down with the Prince de Poix, who kindly offered to take me. We hunt to-morrow morning. The duke has placed two horses at my disposal. To-night he presented me with the badge of the chasse, which was a great honour.

DECEMBER 22

We had a perfect day, but I was too tired to write last night. It was very late when I was able to retire, as I cannot leave until my elders and superiors go. The fine weather made me so sleepy. We killed seven fine sangliers—one fell to me, of which I was very proud; also two deer. It is a wonderful pretty sight the curée in front of a château by torchlight at night; all the spoils of the chase are laid out in front of the famous horseshoe aircase, then a sort of fanfare of cors de chasse is blown for each head of game—in fact, a sort of funeral hymn.

We go back to Paris to-morrow in Mathieu de Montmorency's coach; he is Governor of Compiègne. Such funny posts they have at Court. The Comte de Cossé-Brissac is Premier panetier du Roi.

DECEMBER 24

We have managed to save a little money, and with the legacy which I had from my aunt, which was five hundred francs, we have bought Frances a small string of pearls with a nice diamond clasp. As we were not able to dine with the de Broglies last Christmas we are dining with them to-morrow. Mamma sent the Duchesse a plum-pudding, a huge one. Our cousins Naville and Jules de Budé arrived to-night from Geneva to pay us a visit. Jules is a kindred spirit of mine. Adrien Naville's mother was an heiress, Mlle de Gallatin, the only daughter of the Count Paul Michael, the head of the family and father's guardian. Her mother was née de Bugnac and niece of the Duc de Biron; so Adrien has a host of relatives in Paris. Father is very fond of him as he is very clever and studious. Jules is quite the opposite; his studies are devoted to that of the female form divine.

DECEMBER 26

We had such a cheerful Christmas Eve. Some Americans who have no relatives here; father insisted on inviting them and made mamma prepare a present for each. For supper we had one of the famous plum-puddings, which was carried in all ablaze. Frances has been hugging me ever since I gave her the necklace. I tell her to pay attention to all the pearls that fall from my lips. Oh, woman, woman! Dear mamma gave me a large pair of worsted mittens which she had knitted herself; she intended them for a great surprise, but every time for the last fortnight I went into her room there was a scuffle. One day they were lying in her chair; she suddenly sat down on them, needles and all. They are orange and brown, absolutely hideous, but I will wear them as I cannot wound her feelings. Father gave me five hundred francs—it was good of him; Frances, a satin shaving-paper holder which she had worked with our coat-of-arms, which was quite crooked.

The dinner at the de Broglie's was quite delightful, without any ceremony. Both Adrien and Jules are cousins of Albertine's. We were twenty in all—mostly family. First we had some silly charades and then we ended by dancing. Jules drank much too much. Mamma said to me, "How could you?" I said, "It's Jules; I'm not drunk." We all had presents: mine was a beautiful whip for my curricule with an ivory handle and gold end engraved with my initials. To Frances they gave a lovely brooch formed of a large aquamarine surrounded by small diamonds.

DECEMBER 30

I have been literally burning the candle at both ends. I do not think Jules and I have slept in our own beds since Christmas night. He looks a wreck. I am sorry to say that both he and Adrien leave on New Year's Day; they are going on a tour to Germany and Italy. They are great friends, although so absolutely different in character.

DECEMBER 31

Fules and I have made all sorts of engagements. I am going to have a nap this afternoon as I am certain we shall be up until the small hours of to-morrow morning. Good-bye 1819; I part with you with regret. What a pity I cannot say "Au revoir"!

JANUARY 1, 1820

'A Happy New Year.' New resolutions, only to be broken. Such a night! Last night I did not get home until 7 o'clock this morning. This is rather Irish!

We have just come from paying our respects to the King—the same New Year's Court; also to the Palais Royale and to the Elysée. It is such weary waiting, standing all the time. I wonder father bears it so well; he never seems tired.

JANUARY 24

A magnificent ball at the Elysée last night. In the morning news had come to us of the death of the Duke of Kent, but it was not to be made public until to-day, so the ball would take place. The Duc de Berri looked very much out of temper. The Orléans family did not appear, and it at once became whispered about that the Duke of Kent* was dead. Of course it had a very bad effect. Had the Allies still been here there would have been no ball. It seems a great relief to the Royal Family that the Allies have been withdrawn. I am not surprised—but that they do not show much gratitude.

* Duke of Kent, son of George III, and father of the late Queen Victoria.

FEBRUARY 8

We had a fine time yesterday. Some of our ladies of the opera were going to have a fine car for the Carnival. Several of us wanted to join them, but they were not allowed to have men in their car. We got over the difficulty by getting women's costumes. There were six of us all dressed in full ballet dress, fleshing tights, and full ballet-skirts; bare arms and necks, wigs and masks. I was nearly frozen. We had a lot of champagne, which helped to keep us warm. We had supper at the Maison Dorée and such a supper! About 2 o'clock in the morning there was a loud knocking at the door: "Ouvrez, au nom du Roi." You can imagine our feelings—particularly mine, as I was the only one belonging to an embassy—to be found in ballet-skirts by the police! The door was opened and in walked three of the heads of the police. "Vos noms, messieurs et dames." We had taken off our wigs and masks, so were easily recognized. Suddenly there was a shout from Rochefoucauld, who jumped on the leading man, dragging off his hat and wig, discovering Puységur. To all three he did the same thing. With roars of laughter they told us they had disguised themselves and had been to every room in the café and had taken the names of all the occupants. We were the first to find them out. As they were all friends of ours, we made them join us, and the fun became fast and furious. De la Rochefoucauld had suddenly remembered that during the Carnival no descents of the police were made, so he risked pulling off Puységur's wig. It took me a long time to recover from the shock. It would have been a serious matter for me, particularly if it had been made public. I would have been obliged to leave Paris. I do not know what father would have done. Oh, my head to-day! We are planning some more mischief to come off before the end of the Carnival. Puységur had a list of several well-known people, whose names he took. We are going to

FEBRUARY 10

We put our heads together and have sent the most official-looking documents to all whose names were taken to appear at the Hotel de Ville to-morrow. We intend going to some vantage-point to see them arrive.

FEBRUARY 11

Our joke came off splendidly. Coach after coach drove up, but when the occupants asked for a certain room, which number we put on the document, they were informed there was no such room. Then one of the documents was shown to an official, who said, "It is Carnival; you have been duped." I wish you could have seen their faces. Some of the ones of high rank had written to the Duc de Berri to intercede for them and had not appear. He had been informed that it was a joke and joined in it. We won't hear anything about it. There is not one dare make any trouble. It seems the Duke was very much amused, and has made many sallies about it to the unfortunate ones, particularly the married ones.

FEBRUARY 13

On Saturday there was a magnificent ball given by Monsieur de Greffuhle. He had lately been made a peer. The Duc and Duchesse de Berri were present. There had been rumours that there was a plot to assassinate the Duke; all noticed that Monsieur de Greffuhle never met him, and seemed much relieved when the Berriis retired. The Princesse de Galitzin bade me come to my box at the opera on Sunday. We had the box adjoining the Royal one. The Duc and Duchesse de Berri were very well received. At the conclusion of the opera, before the ballet commenced, the Duchess rose and, bowing to the audience, retired with the Duke. As I was not feeling well, I begged Madame de Galitzin to excuse me and immediately followed. In the corridor

I heard a commotion, and, opening a door, I found myself by the Royal exit. Monsieur de Brissac rushed up to me saying, "Shut the door and stand by it; do not let any one pass in or out. There has been an attack on the life of the Duc de Berri." At that moment the Duke appeared, supported on one side by the Duchess and on the other by Madame de Béthisy.* I could see a dagger sticking in his breast, but he was talking in a low voice to his wife. She was wonderfully calm, but tears were running down her cheeks. She is enceinte. I fear this may kill her. I heard orders being given to send at once for Monsieur and the Duc d'Angoulême. Monsieur arrived first, accompanied by the Duc de Fitz James, and immediately went into the Royal salon, which is behind the King's loge. They were closely followed by the Duc d'Angoulême and the Duc de Maille; then came Monsieur Decazes and a host of others. It was all the more tragic as I could hear the music of the ballet which was still going on. The audience had no knowledge of what had happened. I forgot to mention that before anybody arrived I heard a sharp cry from the Royal salon. I was told afterwards that the Duke tried to pull the knife out of his breast but was unable to do so—that Madame de Béthisy, with great presence of mind, pulled it out. Both she and the Duchess were deluged in blood. I heard somebody say, "Does anybody know if the knife was poisoned?" Monsieur Decazes passed me hurriedly with Fitz-James. When they returned (it seems they had been to question the assassin) I heard Monsieur Decazes say in a loud voice, "The knife is not poisoned." By this time several doctors arrived and were doing all they could to staunch the flow of blood. I could see into the salon, as the door was left open as there were so many people. Monsieur Rohan-Châbot† came up to me and begged me to still stop by

* Lady in waiting to the Duchess.

† Son of the Duc de Rohan.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

door I was guarding. At that moment the Duc d'Orléans, with the Duchesse and Mlle d'Orléans, passed the salon; they were all in tears. The next thing I heard was an order given to send for the King. The Duc de Maille went to fetch him. I felt then there could be much hope. To my horror, I heard the Duchesse de Berri in loud tones denouncing Monsieur Decazes, saying, "C'est lui, le vrai assassin." They tried to stop

A sudden hush and the poor old King arrived, leaning heavily on the Duchesse d'Angoulême and the Duc de Maille.* His Majesty was composed and looking stern. It was an extraordinary sight. The Duchesse d'Angoulême hurriedly passed me and met poor little Mademoiselle, who had been sent for and came carried in the arms of Mlle de Gontaut.† Then two priests entered. I knew then the end was near. Suddenly all knelt. As the sacrament was being given to the dying man I think everybody was in tears; I know I cried. Then in silence all rose to our feet and waited. It seemed hours to me as I was ready to drop with fatigue. Then the King began intoning a prayer. Again all sank on to their knees. The end had come. Then a horrible thing happened. The Duchesse de Berri again commenced to scream, calling Monsieur Decazes "Assassin! Assassin!" This was really too horrible. After they had quieted her, there was absolute silence—with the exception of the Grand Chamberlain announcing "Le Roi, le Roi"—a mournful procession passed me. First, the King supporting the Duchesse de Berri, who had the hand of Mademoiselle, then the Duchesse d'Angoulême on the other side of her; they were followed by all the rest of the Royal Family. I could hear the orders given by the officers to the soldiers who by now were keeping the streets.

Monsieur de Brissac came to me, shook my hands and simply said "Merci." He asked me if I would like to go into the salon. I followed him. He motioned me to kneel and, handing the brush from the holy-water bowl, motioned me to sprinkle the corpse, which I did. I would not believe the Duke was dead. He was still sitting up in a large gilt arm-chair, his head supported by a cushion, and surrounded by the officers of his household. The priest knelt in front of him praying. It was a sight I will never forget. In silence Monsieur de Maille shook my hand, and I retired. On gaining the street, which was packed with people and troops, I had great difficulty in getting through the crowd, had it not happened that I was recognized by one of the officers, Monsieur de Puységur, who sent an escort of soldiers to make way for me. Although more dead than alive when arriving at home, I at once went up to father's room and awakened him. When I told him the news he exclaimed, "What a catastrophe!—the unfortunate Bourbons—a blow for France indeed!" He made me go at once to bed as I was hardly able to stand.

Grand Chamberlain of Louis XVIII.

The MS. here is illegible and I have had to guess at the ending.—ED.

FEBRUARY 16

At 10 o'clock this morning a note was sent that all the Diplomatic Corps were to go to the Tuilleries at 1 o'clock. I accompanied father. The large salle was in total darkness with the exception of about twenty large candles (sièges) in great silver candlesticks. In order of seniority, first the Ambassadors and their suites, then the Ministers, passed before the throne, in front of which was standing the Duc d'Angoulême surrounded by the high Court officials in the deepest mourning. Absolute silence with the exception of the announcement by the Grand Chamberlain as the representative of each country passed—La Russie, l'Espagne, &c. &c.—followed by the dropping on the floor of the halberds with a ringing sound. It was most solemn and impressionable. The Duke bowed to each one. Not a word was spoken. So we passed out.

The assassin's name is Louvel, a saddler. It seems he has been following the poor Duke for a long time waiting his opportunity. He must have had many chances as the Duke went about in the most open manner, often quite alone. Rumours of all sorts. Some say it was a conspiracy. The Duchesse de Berri still accuses Monsieur Decazes of being the head of it. Others that it was a personal revenge. "Cherchez la femme," others say; the Duke's amours were so well known—he not taking the slightest care to hide them.

FEBRUARY 17

This morning father went to the Palais Royal and was received by Mlle d'Orléans. She was in great grief; she was devoted to the Duc de Berri. She said, when dying he was the most collected and calm of them all, that he thought of everybody—of two children, girls, who were in England; they are the daughters of a "Miss Brown" whom he married in London under a false name before the Restoration. He begged his wife to take them and to bring them up as if they were her own daughters. She promised to do so. He tried to comfort one and all.

FEBRUARY 18

So great is the outcry against Monsieur Decazes that he will have to leave the Ministry. Father is much incensed about it; I will not for one moment believe that he was in any way implicated. Decazes' life has been threatened and he has to go about guarded. The people insult him as he passes in his carriage; they are incensed against him. It is a strange thing that the populace always have affection for a Royalty who is a little wild. It was exactly the same with Henri IV, whom the late Duke much resembled in the life he led.

FEBRUARY 19

A Monsieur Claude de Coursergues, a deputy, denounced Monsieur Decazes in the Chamber yesterday as insti-

VOLTAIRE

MME. DENISE

FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING BY THE MARQUISE DE LA VILETTE

indignantly howled down.

The King sent this morning for the Duc de Richelieu, who was on the eve of starting for England to compliment George IV on his accession. The King requested him to take Monsieur Decazes' place, but he absolutely refused to do so. When pressed for his reasons he said "the King was so old" and that "Monsieur" (the heir to the Crown) was absolutely opposed to him.

FEBRUARY 21

It seems that Monsieur had given his word that if he became king he would support Monsieur de Richelieu. Still nothing decided.

FEBRUARY 22

Monsieur Decazes has begged the King to accept his resignation. After some time, it seems, the King, with great grief, accepted it. He created him "Duc" and he goes to London as ambassador. Monsieur de Richelieu at last has consented to accept office. Monsieur has given him every promise of support in every way. Father has no faith in Monsieur's promises. He thinks him false in everything.

The lying-in-state and funeral of the Duc de Berri was very fine. The actual funeral was not on so grand a scale as that of the Prince de Condé, which I have mentioned before.

MARCH 1820

The Duchesse de Berri is more violent than ever against the Duc de Decazes and his party; it is all very painful. Of course all gaiety and entertaining is at an end. For myself, I have no heart for it. I can scarcely realize that the poor Duke is dead—always so gay and cheerful, so full of life and spirits. He will be more and more missed as time goes on; there is nobody to fill his place. The Queen of Sweden is getting madder and madder,

He does not let poor Monsieur de Richelieu alone for a moment; she is the laughing-stock of Paris. He will not even speak to her, but that seems to egg her on all the more. Louvel was questioned in private, but his trial will not take place as yet. Some say he is a lunatic.

APRIL

They only go to the Français now. Mlle George is very fine. The poor old Talma one can hardly hear. It is really sad to see the wreck of such a once fine actor; still at times he has fine bursts of passion, revealing some of his old powers. The opera has been closed since the assassination of the Duke.

APRIL

A bomb exploded yesterday at the Louvre. Rumour says that several bombs have been discovered in the gardens and under the windows of the Duchesse de Berri. The poor old King is much disturbed. He, as well as everybody else, fears that if a bomb did explode near the apartment occupied by the Duchesse de Berri it might bring on a premature confinement. Since the death of the Duke the Duchess has moved to the Tuilleries. The eyes of the whole of France are fixed on the palace, hoping for an heir. Louvel's trial commenced on the 14th. I applied for permission to attend, which was granted.

It seems he is now thought to be a lunatic and there will be no further trial. All this must be most painful to the Royal Family. There are strange rumours afloat about the bombs; even the Duchesse de Berri's name is mentioned—it is too monstrous.

MAY 1820

An officer of bad character has been arrested in connexion with the bomb explosions. He is to be tried at once.

Madame Patterson Bonaparte has intimated her intention of paying a visit to Paris; she is now in Geneva. The Duchesse de Courland (Talleyrand's niece) has been troubling father very much lately. She has interest in property in America and seems to think it is his place to attend to it for her. This has given us all a chance, mamma in particular, as the Duchess comes to see him nearly daily; we all say it is a second case of the Queen of Sweden and Monsieur de Richelieu. I really think it is beginning to trouble him, as he has a horror of any scandal being attached to his name. Pozzo di Borgo strongly advised him to get rid of her. He thinks anybody who has any connexion with Monsieur de Talleyrand dangerous. He has, like father, supreme contempt for the latter—calls him a turncoat, a liar, libertine, &c. &c. He certainly is a man without a vestige of principle.

JUNE

Frances is now seventeen and remarkably pretty. Had the Court not been in mourning she would have made her début, but will now have to wait until next year. I think mamma is very glad, as she dreads having to sit up so late. We tell her she is very lucky only to have one daughter—that most Englishwomen have eight or ten.

JUNE 6

To-day was Louvel's trial. I was present. There were no revelations of any kind. He is a poor lunatic. He had nursed the idea he must kill somebody for years. He is to be executed to-morrow.

JUNE 8

I now deeply regret I went to the execution. There was a large body of troops as there had been serious disturbance in the night. It was at 3 o'clock in bright June sunshine, which made it all the more horrible.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

could imagine human beings could turn into a French mob is horrible. One now realizes the Terror was. The wretched assassin was half-dead before he was dragged up the steps of the guillotine. He fell over in a moment. I had to go and drink brandy—a thing I have never done in my life. It took me two hours to get out of the howling mob more like wild animals than anything else—the men far worse than the men.

I go to Geneva for two months. I will be very quiet and rest and quiet. Of course father has had much to do. The affairs of the Court, with all the intrigues and counter-plots, have occupied all the time of the Count de Courland has been got rid of. Father has a pale face and white hands; Pozzo di Borgo told her that he had leprosy. She wrote begging him not even to write to her, that she feared she had loved him too much, &c. &c. Poor Pozzo passed a quarter of an hour with mamma, who will never forgive him. Father was much amused.

Monsieur de Chateaubriand is deeply hurt that he is not in the Ministry; neither the King nor Monsieur de Talleyrand like him. We leave to-morrow for Geneva. . . .

PART IV

THE MINISTRY IN FRANCE

FROM THE ASSASSINATION OF THE DUC DE BERRI TO THE RETURN OF ALBERT GALLATIN TO AMERICA

SEPTEMBER 1820—JUNE 1823

SEPTEMBER 1820: GENEVA

Father has just had news of a great conspiracy. Unfortunately Monsieur de Lafayette is mixed up in it—in fact, one of the leaders; others are the Duc de Rovigo, Monsieur Lafitte, General Pajol, and a host of others. There is to be a trial before the Court of Peers. I am glad we are here, as if we had been in Paris it would have caused father great worry. He has a very deep affection for Monsieur de Lafayette.

Madame Patterson Bonaparte is here. She is much sought after; her wit and beauty seem to open all doors to her. She is very bitter at the present moment against Mrs. Caton, one of whose daughters married Madame B.'s brother Robert and is now a widow. There is great scandal about her and the Duke of Wellington. He follows her everywhere; in fact, it is an open secret that she is his mistress. Mrs. Caton has married another of her daughters to a Mr. Harvey. The third one is very beautiful, and the mother has great hopes of making a fine marriage for her. Madame Bonaparte talks of nothing else but "Bo" her son, and his marriage. As he is now only a fat boy it is a little premature.

SEPTEMBER 28

We arrived in Paris this morning to find the city in a ferment of enthusiasm on account of the birth of a son to the Duchesse de Berri yesterday. It was really wonderful to see the change in everybody. When we left in May all was dull and black; now everybody, even the streets, are radiant. Cannon are booming; fireworks at night, feu de joie, and goodness knows what. We had at once to go to the palace pour nous inscrire. They say the King is delighted.

SEPTEMBER 29

The child is called the Duc de Bordeaux.* He was privately christened at once, but there is to be a great public christening later on.

We went to-day to the Palais Royal. It did not strike me that the Orléans family looked or seemed particularly pleased. The two daughters of "Mrs. Brown" were here; they are treated with great kindness and have been given titles. "Mrs. Brown" has been given a château in Brittany. She certainly behaved wonderfully well. Her marriage in England was quite en règle. Oddly enough, there is a boy as well, but no notice has been taken of him; he is simply called "Thomas Brown."

OCTOBER

It has been the most extraordinary trial of the leaders of the conspiracy of August. All the leaders have escaped free and only some most unimportant persons have been punished. The Duc de Bassano has been allowed to return to France. He is so old and considered quite harmless now.

NOVEMBER

We have some work to do, as Monsieur de Richelieu has intimated to father that he is willing to open negotiations for the Indemnity. That anything will really be done

* Henri-Charles-Ferdinand-Marie-Dieudonné d'Artois, Duc de Bordeaux, born September 28, 1820, afterwards known as the Comte de Chambord.

I strongly doubt. Mr. Sheldon has gone on a holiday, so all the important work falls on my shoulders. Paris still dull as far as Society goes. I was pointed out the Marquise de Guiccioli yesterday, Lord Byron's mistress; she is very charming to look at, gentle and sweet.

Of course the one topic of conversation is the Duchesse de Berri and her son, the Duc de Bordeaux—" Espérance de la France," as he is called. The King looks much better, is far more cheerful. There are some unpleasant rumours of the Duc d'Orléans having thrown doubts on the legitimacy of the Duc de Bordeaux, but I believe it is without question of a doubt that he is the son of the Duc de Berri. When the latter was dying he said to the King, "Soigne ma femme; elle est enceinte."

I am going to fêtes every night as Paris is again plunged into wild gaiety. The people are too glad of an excuse to throw off the mourning and gloom. Frances makes her début at the first Court. I have been telling her how to behave. She has a dancing mistress to teach her how to curtsy and to back without tumbling over.

The christening of the Duc de Bordeaux was a splendid sight. He was held up at an open window to be shown to the populace and was received with roars of cheers. The old Duke of Gordon was present; I was so glad to see him. I had a little love affair with Katinka Galitzin. Her father is not very rich, and as I have nothing, it soon came to an end. We remain the best of friends.

Really Mr. Astor is dreadful. Father has to be civil to him, as in 1812-13 he rendered great services to the Treasury. He came to déjeuner to-day; we were simply en famille, he sitting next to Frances. He actually wiped his fingers on the sleeves of her fresh white spencer. Mamma in discreet tones said, "Oh, Mr. Astor, I must apologize; they have forgotten to give you a serviette." I think he felt foolish.

A splendid Court ball last night; the dresses and jewels

the ladies and the superb uniforms of the men made a fine show. Father looks like a blot of ink amongst all this finery. Of course I dress as I like; we have no official diplomatic uniform in America. Some near-sighted Hungarian officer, not seeing he was in front of the Duchesse d'Angoulême, caught his spur in the lace of her dress and tore yards of splendid lace. He was covered with confusion, but she was so gracious; she is so womanly. I do not think I have ever seen so sad a face, but she is the most royal-looking person I have ever seen; the "descendant of a hundred kings" certainly applies to her. I noticed her expression of intense scorn when Prince de Talleyrand passed; he is horrible.

With the change of Ministry after the disgrace, or at least removal, of the Duc de Decazes, Monsieur de Richelieu is again in power. Monsieur de Serre, Minister of Justice; Pasquier, Affaires Étrangères (which father much regrets); Latour Maubourg, Ministre de la Guerre; Portal Marine and Roy, Ministre des Finances; Baron Leunier, Directeur of Police; and Monsieur Siméon, Ministre de l'Intérieur. Father thinks it a very weak Government—that it will not last long. . . .

NOVEMBER

The Marquis de Lauriston, a descendant of Law, the South Sea Bubble adventurer, is appointed Ministre de la Maison du Roi. We had a small sauterie for Frances and her young friend. She's now seventeen. It was very pretty; all the young girls were so fresh and enjoyed everything so much it was a pleasure to watch them. Dear mamma had arranged a surprise in the shape of a gift hunt. We all were given numbers and then we went into the gallery, where all the presents were hidden in all sorts of the most out-of-the-way places. I helped her to arrange it with the invaluable Berthal. Each had a number corresponding with tickets. It was really good and quite delightful—such laughter and little suppressed shrieks of delight when the parcel with the corresponding number was discovered. The presents were so pretty—a donkey with a wobbly head for me and a goose full of bon-bons for Frances. We both agreed it was too personal; mamma has more wit than we gave her credit for. Father came in with dear Pozzo di Borgo and looked on at the “hunt,” and was much amused. Then a delightful little supper. It was all over by 11 o'clock. Of course there is little entertaining on a large scale on account of the Duc de Berri's death; we of the corps diplomatique entertain in a small way. The English Ambassadress has sent out invitations for a party for very young people for Thursday; it is to be costumé. Frances is going as “Titania” and I as the ass. I have had a wonderful head made by the costumier of the opera; it is all of silk and is very light—not at all hot.

The little bal costumé was a great success; some of the dresses were beautiful. Frances was as pretty as anybody; she has that lovely skin and such beautiful eyes. Her dress was all clinging white silver material, and she had a wreath of light blue cornflowers in her hair, which was flowing down her back. Her wand was a huge sunflower. Sosthène de la Rochefoucauld, with his usual cynical manner, came up to me and said: “Tout le monde te reconnaît; tu n'as pas pu choisir un costume qui t'ira mieux.” I will be even with him yet. I never knew a man who fancied himself so much; he is a male Madame de Boigne.

We had a Maypole dance; there was a beautiful “maypole” decorated with flowers and ribbons. After this was finished we all (the young people) filed before the Ambassador and Ambassadress dancing a polonaise. We arrived home at midnight, but I went out again. Father has enjoined mamma never to ask me any questions—very wise, I think, as if I told her the truth she would soon be in her grave, with her strict ideas. Will I ever reform? Paris is waking up. Pozzo di Borgo is giving a sauterie for Frances. He sent to Russia for all sorts of beautiful presents; he has consulted mamma about some original way of distributing them.

NOVEMBER 20

It was delightful at the Russian Embassy—all very young people. After supper the doors of the ballroom were thrown open; half-way across the room a great rope of flowers about three feet from the ground, at the far end a row of targets. Silver arrows were presented to the ladies and gold ones to the gentlemen; we had to throw them at the targets. If we hit (I am sorry to say the girls often missed), Pozzo, assisted by several ambassadors, presented us with the most beautiful Russian bibelots, much too fine. I had a beautiful inlaid snuff-box; Frances a complete Russian peasant costume—the head-dress had seed-pearls and turquoises on it. We danced all sorts of pretty dances, ending with a Russian mazurka which twelve of us had learnt. I led off with Katinka Galitzin. It was really extremely pretty and very well done. We had straps covered with gilt bells on our ankles—that is, the men; the girls had the same on their wrists. The orchestra as a finale played all the different national airs. “Yankee Doodle” sounded rather tame and vulgar after the grand Russian Hymn and “God save the King.” Oddly enough, “God save the King” is the national Hymn of Geneva; it was played after the “Escalade” in 1602. The name of the composer is not known; both Lulli and Handel claimed it, but that is absurd, as the original manuscript music is in the Arsenal at Geneva. After a Russian ouch chaudi, which Pozzo insisted upon our drinking, home we went. I was very tired.

came down to breakfast this morning in her costume. Poor mamma's face was a study in itself. She could not utter at first, so father stepped in to help, saying, "How lovely you look, and where is this finery come from?" He knew nothing of it, having not been at the Embassy. By this time mamma recovered her speech. I saw the storm coming. "I have, have you forgotten that it is the Lord's Day? Leave your room and pray for forgiveness." I left the room as he did father.

APRIL 1820

At the Spanish Embassy. The Papal nuncio was here. All ladies in high waists. It seems it is not proper for ladies to be décolleté when he is present, even at Court. Madame S. embarrasses me at times; she looks all over, as I am quite certain people must see she looks at me. Mamma was very fine in red. Her skin is so deadly white and fine that she has not been noticed anywhere; I was very proud of her. When the nuncio retired some Spanish dances were danced in the evening. Such a strange custom! When the nuncio retired he was preceded by two footmen walking backwards, holding silver candelabra with lighted candles; the same thing was repeated when he retired. I noticed mamma was astonished when mamma did not kiss his ring. Afterwards explained to him that she was a Quaker. Driving home, father laughingly teased her, saying she should have done so. "No such thing for me," she said. We found Frances had been ill. A doctor was sent for and fears it is scarlet fever. He says he cannot be certain until to-morrow, but it is no rash as yet.

DECEMBER 2

Poor Frances has scarlet fever and is isolated in the chalet in the garden. Mamma will not leave her. Father had some news from America which has rather annoyed him. It seems some ignorant Yankee called attention to the way he was living in Paris—that his house was too large, that his servants wore showy liveries, &c. &c. Father is simplicity itself, but he feels he ought to keep up a certain style in a country where such things are so much thought of; he feels it is due to the prestige of the country he represents. They might just as well resent his going to Court—it is quite ridiculous. Monsieur de Lafayette has just called; he consulted him on the matter. The former is certainly republican enough in all his ideas. Father has penned a very dignified answer, which I have just drafted. He requests to be recalled that his way of living is not considered proper, but that he will not change it in any way. He and I are dining with the Barings to-day. Of course mamma had to excuse herself on account of Frances.

DECEMBER 4

We had a charming dinner at the Barings'. The old Duc de Bassano was present. He is really about the only respectable person that Napoleon created a duke, although he was a lawyer or hommes d'affaires, or something of that sort, but of low origin. Poor Frances is better as it is a mild attack. In any case it will prevent her from going to any of the Christmas festivities. Mamma feared her complexion might be injured, but the doctor assures her it will not be in any way affected. . . .

DECEMBER

I have refused all invitations for the present as, although Frances is still isolated, I have never had scarlet fever myself. The doctor thinks I had better remain quiet for a few days. . . .

DECEMBER 10

I had a piece of very bad luck to-day. A certain lady of the grand monde had smiled upon me. I had a rendez-vous with her at the old Palais Royal in the Marais in the afternoon. It is the most unlikely place in the world to meet anybody. I know of a very quiet little café there with cabinet particulier; as we walked toward it I spied a lady approaching with a footman behind her. Horror of horrors!—mamma! Now if it had been the moon arm-in-arm with the sun taking a walk I would not have been more flabbergasted, but it was mamma in the flesh. Nothing was to be done but to brazen it out. With a sickly smile and a grand coup de chapeau I approached her, instantly saying, "Allow me to present you to the Comtesse de C." Mamma stared, mamma curtsied; Madame de C. did the same. Mamma curtsied again, Madame de C. ditto; but not a word did mamma utter. I own I was rather proud of her, but the situation was becoming rather strained. I said to Madame de C., "Comtesse, will you allow me to conduct you to your coach?" This really meant a fiacre, as Madame de C. had left her coach in the Rue de Rivoli. Mamma glared, curtsied again; finding her voice, said, "James, return when you have found the comtesse's coach," with an accent grave on the coach. I could not do anything else. When I did return mamma took my arm and walked ten times around the Palais Royal. I suppose it will mean some more tracts when we get home. It seems the poor old dear, on account of fear of infection to others, had come to this isolated place to take a little exercise. My luck is on the wane.

DECEMBER 12

Not a word have I heard since of my little peccadillo. I think father must have said something, for I am certain she told him. She really thinks I am still a child, forgetting I am three-and-twenty.

DECEMBER 17

Madame de C. will never forgive me; she is furious.

DECEMBER 20

The boulevards are so brilliant for Noël, I walk there every evening.

DECEMBER 26

The usual Christmas festivities, but I have become very engé, so remained at home. All my friends seem to be getting married, and I am only semi-attached.

JANUARY 1, 1821

Another year gone, and still we stop on here practically doing nothing. Father is getting old, and I doubt if he will ever return to America. Mr. Astor has written to me again making new offers, all of which he has refused. He says he must not die rich after holding the posts he has. I have never known of anybody, with the exception of the Duc de Richelieu, who is so absolutely honest and disinterested; both on his mission to the Hague and in England he only charged his absolute out-of-pocket expenses. Would that there were more politicians in America of his calibre! I fear there are few, if any. It is not astonishing he has so many firm friends such as Alexander Baring, Pozzo di Borgo, Lafayette, and the Humboldts—men whose friendship is worth having. I only wish I were more like him.

MONDAY

Had a bad accident skating at Vincennes on Saturday and broke my arm—fortunately the left one. Had it been my right arm I do not know what I should have done. It caused me great pain; the bone-setter was very rough. To add to my troubles, my hair is beginning to fall out. This was caused by the fever I contracted that horrible winter at St. Petersburg. One consolation—I can always wear a wig.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1821

FEBRUARY 2

I had a horrid accident on Saturday. I was driving a new horse in my cabriolet with Lucien up behind. Coming down the Elysées I spied the King's coach driven at the usual high speed, which makes a rumbling. As etiquette requires, I drew up at the side, and was holding my hat off when my horse shied and over we went. Of course, I fell on my injured arm, which has always given me trouble; it was badly set at first—in fact, it had to be broken again and set, causing me great uneasiness. The Comtesse de Brissac was passing in her coach; she stopped and most kindly insisted on conveying me to her hotel in the Faubourg St.-Honoré, which is quite close. She sent for a surgeon, and, much to my chagrin, he announced another slight fracture. After attending to me, Madame de B. most graciously put her coach at my disposal to take me home. She is forty but still very handsome. She held my right hand while the surgeon was binding my arm; I think she squeezed it. Nous verrons. Lucien and the horse were not injured but the cabriolet was damaged.

This morning I was sitting in mamma's boudoir reading, as my arm was so painful I could not write. Frances was embroidering and mamma going through her religious devotions, which consists of reading a sermon of Jeremy Bentham's, her daily allowance. A footman hurriedly entered without knocking—a venial offence. He looked white and scared, and mumbled, "Would Madame l'Ambassadress permit Madame Berthal to speak to her?" Enter Madame Berthal, very red and flurried, her very cap quivering with excitement. Approaching mamma, in a low tone she said, "Madame l'Ambassadress, there has been an accident. Louise (one of the kitchen wenches) has tripped over the cat on the lower stairs, and there are vo." "Two what?" asked mamma. "Twins," replied Madame Berthal. "What nonsense!" said mamma. "Is the girl injured? It does not matter about the kittens; drown them." "Not kittens, Madame Ambassador, babies." Never will I forget mamma's face. Down went Jeremy Bentham bang on the floor. Up rose mamma, her cap literally standing on end. She thundered, "Frances, leave the room." I could no longer contain myself and burst into roars of laughter. This was too much for mamma. "James, I am ashamed of you. Leave the room at once." I really expected to receive Jeremy on my head before reaching the door. Only too glad to escape, I sought refuge in father's room. When I succeeded in suppressing my laughter I commenced telling him what had happened. I had only commenced my story when he was summoned to mamma's room. When he returned he tried to look serious, but saw the corners of his mouth twitching. Poor Berthal, mamma has dismissed for her want of discretion. Father went to the Convent of the Sacré Cœur, which is quite close to us, and obtained permission to send the poor girl and her twins to the hospital there. He sent for a coach and had her conveyed there. What passed between him and mamma I do not know, but she locked herself in the room for the remainder of the day. Frances asked me this evening if I thought she could have one of the kittens. I told her they were drowned!!! The twins died last night. . . .

My arm is so painful I cannot write any more. . . . Mamma has forgiven me. Jean, such a nice-looking fellow, is the cause of all the trouble. He is going to marry the girl as soon as she is well. Father insists on retaining them both in his service. Mamma looks injured and draws deep sighs. Poor Berthal has been reinstated; father insisted upon it.

There have been more bomb explosions and the police have not the slightest clue. On January 27 a bomb in the Tuilleries—nobody injured. On the 31st another at the Treasury, several near the palace windows; still not the faintest clue. Scenes every day in the Chamber, one party accusing the other. Then a lull for a time.

FEBRUARY 15

I do not feel well enough to join in the Carnival this year. The fact is, I have had enough of it all. I am now nearly four-and-twenty, and it is high time to settle down. Frances is to make her début this year but not until the spring.

FEBRUARY 17

Such a magnificent ball at the Tuilleries last night. The Duchesse d'Angoulême was superbly regal: her train of white velvet thickly embroidered with gold fleurs-de-lis with a broad gold border, lined and faced with ermine; her dress entirely of superb lace, which they told me had belonged to her mother; the highest diadem of emeralds and diamonds that I have ever seen, it was quite four inches. A veil of superb lace hung down below her shoulders; a belt and stomacher of diamonds and one enormous emerald in the centre; from the shoulders hung great strings of diamonds. The Duchess d'Orléans in rose-coloured velvet; Mlle d'Orléans in blue; the Duchesse de Berri in white with a train bordered with sable (this was her first appearance since her husband's assassination). They made a truly royal group. The poor King was in a chair with wheels, as he suffers from swollen legs.

FEBRUARY 20

At last I have had a bilious attack. Mamma is in her element; she loves to say "I told you so." Now, when one is bilious one is not in the best of tempers; I do so long to throw a boot at her.

FEBRUARY 22

All right again and taking Frances to some small evening parties. She has not been brought up in the French way; mamma allows her much more liberty. Frances can take care of herself; she has great dignity combined with sweetness, and under it all—what shall I call it?—a will of her own. She is very lovely to look at.

FEBRUARY 24

Now Lent has come—a respite for which I am very grateful. I am going to do some serious reading and improve myself; I fear I have been very frivolous up to the present. Mathieu de Montmorency has invited me to hunt at Compiègne, of which he is governor; I shall certainly avail myself of his kindness. If it were not that the King's horses were at his disposal and he offered to mount me, I would not be able to do so on account of the expense.

MARCH 2

I took Frances to the Palais Royal yesterday afternoon to see a little religious play acted by the children of the Duc d'Orléans. The Duc de Chartres* is now nearly twelve years old, and Mlle d'Orléans is nine. Some of the younger children also took part. The other actors were children of the Duc d'Escar and the Montmorency children. It was really very pretty. After the little play all the children sat down to a simple dinner; we waited on them. Their aunt, Mlle d'Orléans, is so charming, so simple and unaffected. She is very fond of father; I think it is that attracts me to her.

* Duc de Chartres, son of the Duc d'Orléans, born at Palermo September 3, 1810.

MARCH 4

Father has had some disquieting letters from America about Albert. He has not shown them to me, nor has he told me of their contents, but I fear there is some trouble; Albert is so odd. I am very sorry, as I dislike to see father troubled.

MARCH 7

Madame Patterson Bonaparte has been much disappointed that she has not been able to arrange a marriage for her "Bo," whom she considers a prince of the House of the now fallen Bonapartes. Mr. Astor, in whom she has great confidence, and who has been in Rome, has informed her that she must not put any reliance in any members of the Bonaparte family. Madame mère is the most sincere and the Princesse Pauline Borghesi is absolutely unreliable. Her friend, Lady Morgan, is also in Rome, and told her the same thing. She has written volumes to father asking his advice. She is really too bad, as she is certain not to act by it. He has a great dislike for the Bonaparte family; of course the great brains and pluck of the first emperor he cannot but have admiration for.

MARCH 9: COMPIEGNE

I have been here since yesterday, and finely lodged in the château. All are most civil and nice to me. We hunted all day to-day and I am tired out. Just going to bed.

MARCH 12

I came back to Paris yesterday after a most enjoyable visit. I am a little sorry I went for so long. I find father has been doing the copying of his own private letters and dispatches, which he will not allow any one to do with the exception of myself. We dine with the Duc and Duchesse de Laval. I have never seen their hotel, but father tells me it is the finest in Paris.

RCH 14

most painful disclosure has been made. It seems the Duchesse de Berri told her Father-confessor that she was the instigator of all the bomb explosions, which were placed by her own people. He made her tell all this to the King. All the King said was, "Stop all her inquiry and try to forgive her." She is an Italian and a lover of intrigue. All this has made a most painful impression.

RCH 16, 1821

I really do not know how it will end. Yesterday I was sitting tête-a-tête with Madame S.—her husband being away, as she thought. Fortunately, she has a most discreet maid. She, hearing Monsieur S.'s carriage in the courtyard, rushed and warned us. I was just able to escape down the escalier de service. I went to the carriage, and I suppose after the fright I had had nothing was used me, so I returned home. I am glad I did, as I found the house in an uproar. Poor Berthal had fallen down in the whole flight of marble stairs. Frances says the staircase is broken to bits. All I could see of her was her head, which had at last fallen off and was sitting quietly in a hall chair. There is a surgeon and two doctors with her now. Of course mamma is very much worried; but this did not prevent her forbidding a priest to enter the house, as one of the servants had sent for.

RCH 19

I forgot to write about the Lavalley dinner. It was absolutely superb—on a scale of magnificence quite equal to the Court entertainment. We sat down eighty at table, and the banquet lasted for four mortal hours. I counted thirty footmen. The Duchess was a very great heiress and the Duke was also very rich.

MARCH 21

I drove to St.-Cloud to-day in my curricule. It is beginning to rattle a bit. If we stop here much longer I must have a new one. Poor Mrs. P., of "Bologna" fame, died to-day. Mr. Livingstone returns from a very extensive tour and leaves for America at once.

MARCH 25

There is every prospect now of father either going home or going to London. The latter mamma would prefer, as she has now become quite reconciled to living abroad; in fact, I do not think she would care to return home at present. Father does not like London. He had a long conference with Pozzo di Borgo to-day. They are such close friends, and he thinks very highly of Pozzo's opinion. Lafayette dined here yesterday; he has aged considerably, but is always delightful. Father fears as he gets older he will be even more indiscreet than in his youth, or indeed more impulsive.

MARCH 29

Some very disagreeable communications from Mr. Adams to-day. I really think he, being now Secretary of State, is paying father up for imaginary wrongs when at Ghent. When I look back upon that time I am amazed that father bore so well with him and Mr. Clay; they were quarrelling like two spoiled children all the time. Father did all he could to restore peace between them, but it was of daily occurrence and most trying. I sometimes think we may return to live in Geneva and abandon America altogether. I, personally, would be delighted, but I fear we are not rich enough to do this. I must make some money; I cannot always be a drag on father.

APRIL 1

There is a smell of spring in the air to-day. Frances tried to fool me to-day, sending me a letter challenging me to a duel. I recognized her handwriting at once. I did not say a word about it. She has been worrying mamma for a long time to buy her a spencer at Madame Le Vestris' in the Rue de la Paix; I have heard of nothing else for weeks. So off to Madame L. I went. Made her do me up a box with large gold letters with her address on it. I bought a murderous-looking fish and wrapped it in many papers. Imitating mamma's handwriting, I put a little note on top of the silk paper that she would see the moment the cover was lifted. I timed the box to arrive while we were at dinner. Great success. Frances opened the box. Only seeing the note, she rushed and hugged mamma, who I must say looked rather astonished. Rushing back to unpack her coveted spencer, as she thought, the smell of fish met her nose. With a squeak (women always squeak) she seized the fish and made a dash for me, but was too late. I was out of the window into the garden, the fish after me. A long list of diplomatic dinners to be got through. We are engaged for every day for two weeks. Father hates all this but is forced to accept. Mamma now, I think, loves these entertainments. She, like all women, loves dress. This gives her an opportunity to show off her finery.

APRIL 6

There were serious disturbances last evening at the Ecole de Droits de Paris; some rioting. The troops had to be called out. What a mistake it is to be dragged into a liaison, particularly with a married woman! If something does not happen I shall not have a hair on my head.

APRIL 9

Since the death of the Duc de Berri a great change has certainly come over the jeunesse dorée of Paris; not half so much entraîn. I think he really gave the impetus to us all. I dined yesterday at the Trois Frères Provençaux* in the Palais Royal with some boon companions. I do not know how it was, the dinner was excellent, the wine as well, but we all seemed dull and depressed. I hardly dare own it, but I fear we are all blasé. I commenced a little too young to enjoy life. I have had a good seven years of it; and what I used to look on then as the height of enjoyment I now find tiresome. I try to take interest in the political questions of the day. I read most carefully all the English as well as American papers that we receive and try to keep myself au courant of everything of importance. I believe one can train one's mind to serious matters. I certainly have wasted a lot of time.

APRIL 10

Have been taking Frances to see all the fine churches; I don't think she cares much about it.

APRIL 12

Father has presented me with a new curricule; it is painted yellow, which is much the vogue at present. . . .

APRIL 15

We are eating through our dinners. Oh, the bore of it all!

APRIL 20

A fine entertainment at Versailles with some Russian Grand Dukes. The King was not able to be present and Monsieur did the honours. The fountains were all playing. A splendid banquet. Looking out of one of the windows looking on the Cours d'Honneur, the whole scene seemed to be conjured up before me: the dames de la halle more like wild beasts, then women shouting and screaming, then dragging the coach with the unfor-fortunate King and Queen in it. As I was meditating on all this I felt a hand on my shoulder; it was the dear old Duke of Gordon. He said, "A penny for your thoughts." I blurted out exactly what had been passing through my mind. He then, really with much emotion, described the whole scene most vividly to me; pointed out exactly where he stood, the immense scorn and dignity of Marie Antoinette as she entered the coach, the horrible drive back to Paris. He said he did all he could, but he was absolutely powerless in the hands of the frenzied mob. He slipped his arm through mine saying, "It is better to try and bury unpleasant memories." We joined the Court in the Salle des Glaces.

* A restaurant only recently demolished.

APRIL 21

Father took me to-day to see Madame Condorcet, the widow of the Marquis Condorcet, the friend of Voltaire. She is only fifty-three but looks much older—one of the saddest faces I have ever seen. She welcomed us with effusion, taking both father's hands, holding them, and saying, "You knew my husband." She was a Mlle de Grouchy. It seems they were an ideal couple. Her perfect character made Condorcet a believer in equal rights for women. Her only child is Madame O'Connor, the wife of General O'Connor.

MAY 3

Mr. Adams has been playing more of what I call "Yankee tricks"; he certainly is an impossible person. He is not a man of great force or intelligence, but his own opinion of himself is immense. I really think father, in a covert way, pulls his leg. I know he thinks little of his talents and less of his manners.

MAY 21

Frances is greatly excited as the time approaches for her to make her début at Court. She came to me in rather a mysterious manner to-day and began to make much of me. I suspected there was something at the bottom of it, so said to her, "Out with it; what is it you want?" She is a little afraid of mamma. She wants me to persuade the latter to let her have a more elegant frock for Court. I promised to do my best.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1821

MAY 22

Mamma is adamant. Frances is to wear what she decrees. Simplicity above all things. For a wonder, I quite agree with mamma. Frances is quite pretty enough and she needs but a very simple setting. I told her this and consoled her with a little judicious flattery about her skin, eyes, hair, &c. &c. She is but a woman.

MAY 24

The brothers Humboldt were at déjeuner to-day. Formerly I did not take any interest in their conversation, but it was quite different to-day. I was sorry when they retired. Father delights in their society. They certainly seem to appreciate him; for this I love them.

JUNE 2

Frances made her début at Court last night. She certainly did look very lovely. All I know of her dress—she was in white, a great big wreath of pink roses round her head. She was quite self-possessed and bore herself with much dignity. All the members of the Royal Family smiled on her. Driving home she burst into sobs. Poor child, I suppose it was the pent-up excitement.

JUNE 10

I have suffered a great deal lately with my arm; I fear it will be permanently stiff—I can hardly raise it now. I hope father will decide on Aix-en-Savoie, as I will then be able to go in for the cure. I am afraid rheumatism has settled in my arm.

[1821] DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

JUNE 15

So little of interest to record in my journal at present. I seem now to think that the everyday occurrences of "the monde" are not worth recording. Of course, anything of importance that I want to remember I make notes of. If father should ever get hold of this diary I wonder what he will think of it. Mamma asked me to-day if I thought he was worrying about Albert. She does not think he at all approves of the life the latter is leading. He does not seem to care for people of his own class—only farmers and their families.

JUNE 30

There have been rumours that the Emperor is ill at St. Helena. Nothing confirmed.

JULY 10

The news has just arrived of the death of Napoleon. He died on May 5. I was much astonished at the way the news was received. The hero which the whole French nation had worshipped, whom all Europe had trembled before, it might have been an ordinary actor who had died. Really one could feel great disgust. A mighty man indeed he was with all his faults. The first I heard of it was cried about the streets: "La Mort de Napoléon à St. Helena, deux sous." Oh, the irony of it!

JULY 15

The Bonapartists here show the greatest respect to the Emperor. They have petitioned the King to allow the body to be brought to France and buried, but he will not hear of it. Father says it would be most unwise—that France is beginning to settle down after all the troubles she has gone through; that even the Emperor's body will excite enthusiasm in many and might lead to very serious results. Father received several letters asking if he thought America would join in petitioning the King. It is really too absurd. What has America to do with it? Madame Patterson Bonaparte, wonderful to relate, has written to father full of praise of the dead Emperor.

JULY 18

An extraordinary thing has happened. Father wished for a document, and applied for it to the Duc de Bassano; the latter has all the copies of the archives of the Emperor. A document was sent, but not the one applied for; it was a copy of a Trianon Decree of August 5, 1810. This decree was entirely withheld from the American Minister. Had it been known there would not have been any war between England and America. It bears the same date of the Berlin and Milan decrees, which were to be revoked on November 1. Never before have I seen my father so angry; he absolutely lost control of himself and used the strongest language. The underhand meanness, the perfidy, injustice, so low and despicable. It was the Emperor's wish, evidently, to do all in his power to crush a young and rising nation. Father went at once to see the Duc de Bassano, but on arriving there he could hardly say anything, he found the poor old Duke utterly crushed by the death of the Emperor. He evidently knew nothing of his mistake, so father did not undeceive him. He sent a copy of the decree to Mr. Adams with very strong remarks on the subject.

GALLATIN to J. Q. ADAMS

PARIS, September 15, 1821

SIR,

[First part of letter omitted.]

But the Trianon Decree was intended for the St. Sebastian, Amsterdam, and other cases of the same period. It is not a condemnation either in form or in substance, but it certainly announces the intention to condemn. It bears date the same day on which it was officially communicated to our Minister that the Berlin and Milan decrees would be revoked on the first day of the ensuing November; and no one can suppose that if it had been communicated or published at the same time the United States would, with respect to the promised revocation of the Berlin and Milan decrees, have taken that ground which ultimately led to the war with Great Britain. It is indeed unnecessary to comment on such a glaring act of combined injustice, bad faith, and meanness as the enacting and concealment of that decree exhibits; and I cannot suppose that it will ever be brought forward by this Government for the purpose of repelling our claims to indemnity, especially as the grounds assumed for the measure are evidently mere pretences and altogether untenable. Yet when I first conversed, in 1816, with the Duc de Richelieu on the subject of our claims, he alluded to a statement prepared in his bureau for him, in which the Act of Congress of March 1809 was mentioned as having afforded cause for reprisals.

The copy of the Trianon Decree was given to a friend of Mr. Parish by the Duke of Bassano, then Secretary of the Council.

I enclose a Greek copy and a French translation of an appeal of the Greeks to the citizens of the United States.

I have the honour, &c.,

ALBERT GALLATIN

DÉCISION DU 5 AOÛT 1810*

Vu le rapport ci-dessus fait au conseil de commerce et des manufactures, d'où il résulte:

(1) Que le Gouvernement de Etats-Unis ne s'est pas borné par son acte du 1er mars, 1809, à ordonner qu'à dater du 20 mai suivant les bâtimens et marchandises françaises qui entreraient dans les ports seraient mis

* For translation see Appendix III.

sous le séquestre, mais qu'il a ordonné la confiscation des dits bâtimens et marchandises:

(2) Qu'il a établi par le même acte que lorsque les communications avec le France viendraient à se rétablir, les confiscations continueraient à avoir leur effet:

(3) Que l'acte du 1er mars, 1809, a été mis en exécution toutes les fois que l'occasion s'en est présentée, nonseulement contre les marchandises, mais aussi contre les bâtimens français:

Nous avons ordonné et ordonnons ce qui suit

(1) Les fonds provenant des ventes des marchandises américaines qui ont été effectuées jusqu'à ce jour, et dont le montant avait été mis en dépôt à la caisse d'amortissement, seront transportés au trésor public.

(2) Les marchandises américaines qui sont mis sous le séquestre seront misés en vente, et les fonds en provenants versés au trésor public.

(3) Les bâtimens américains sur le soit desquels il n'avait point été statué jusqu'à ce jour, seront également mis en vente et les fonds en provenants versés au trésor public.

(4) Attendu que l'acte des Etats-Unis du 1er mars, 1809, ne contient aucune disposition contre les équipages de nos bâtimens, voulant toujours traiter les Etats-Unis aussi favorablement qu'il est possible, et n'usant qu'à regret du droit de représaille à leur égard, nous entendons que les équipages des bâtimens américains entrés dans nos ports ne soient point considérés comme prisonniers, mais soient envoyés dans leur patrie.

(5) Les dispositions ci-dessus seront exécutées à l'égard de tous les bâtimens américains entrés et séquestrés dans nos ports depuis le 20 mars 1809, jusqu'au 1er mai de la présente année 1810, date de l'acte par lequel les Etats-Unis ont révoqué celui du 1er mars, 1809.

(6) A l'avenir et jusqu'au 1er novembre prochain, époque fixée par la lettre de notre ministre des relations

extérieures au plenipotentiaire des Etats-Unis pour la révocation de nos décrets de Berlin et de Milan (dans le cas où les conditions établies dans la dite lettre seraient remplies), les navires américains pourront entrer dans nos ports; mais leur déchargement ne pourra avoir lieu, à moins qu'ils ne soient munis d'une license signée de notre main, que sur un rapport fait en conseil de commerce, constatant qu'ils n'ont pas été dénationalisés par leur soumission aux arrêts du conseil Britannique, et qu'ils n'ont point contrevenu à nos décrets de Berlin et de Milan.

En notre palais de Trianon, le 5 août, 1810.

(Signé) NAPOLEON

JULY

Madame Récamier has closed her salon for the present. Most of the adherents of the Bonapartists are in the deepest mourning. Surely it is the least they can do, considering the Emperor picked most of them out of the mud and made them rich and noble. Joseph Bonaparte seems to have saved an immense fortune; he is living in luxury in America. Some of those wretched Murats are also there.

JULY

As Frances has been presented at Court, mamma now takes her to balls, &c. It is very trying for her. I am glad to say Frances is far prettier than I thought she would be, and I am very proud to have such a pretty sister. I do hope she will make a good marriage and not have to go back to America. We have to go to some waters for mamma's rheumatism. I think Aix-en-Savoie will be the place decided on. The baths are good but primitive. It is near Geneva. Also we have relations in the neighbourhood.

AUGUST 1: AIX-EN-SAVOI

We are comfortably installed here in a little villa they supply us with. Both mamma and myself are taking a cure for rheumatism. Father only remained a few days to see us settled and then went to Geneva; it is so close. He is staying with the Navilles. This is a beautiful country but very hot. The Lac du Bourget is about a mile from here. I have hired a boat and take Frances out fishing with me. It is such a rest after Paris. We have some friends from Geneva; the de Sellons from Allaman are also here. The Monastery of Hautecombe is on the other side of the lake. It is the burial-place of the Dukes of Savoy and their families; and they also used to live in a part of the monastery. There is a long terrace on it about ten to twenty feet above the lake. The story is that the ladies of the House of Savoy used to fish from this terrace, that there were men in boats below who placed live fish on their hooks and then gave a little jerk—much to the delight of the ladies, who thought they were fine fisherwomen. My arm is much better; I can raise it quite high already. Very much troubled by flies, which sting. The grapes are ripe, and we pay fifty centimes to go into a vineyard and eat as many as we like.

OCTOBER

Aix did mamma good, and now we are installed for the winter. Father fears there will be poor results re Indemnity from France. He says the Ministry play with him and are continually changing their tactics. He really thinks he ought to return to America and enter into more active life. He likes his life here; it all suits him, but he feels he is wasting time. He is continually being urged to enter public life again in America; he will not, I think. The whole system of political life in America has undergone a change, and he feels it will be most distasteful to him.

NOVEMBER 10

Poor Albertine de Broglie is in great trouble as she has lost her baby—fortunately, the youngest one. I have to relieve mamma, taking Frances to balls, &c. Madame S. returns to-day.

NOVEMBER 12

Ball at the Palais Royale. Frances looked lovely and was very much admired; she danced every dance. I love to see her enjoying herself. Of course, Madame de Boigne had to say something disagreeable to mamma. Looking at Frances, who was dancing with La Roche-oucauld, she said, "I see you have brought your daughter up à l'Anglaise." "No, à l'Américaine," said mamma, with a strong stare at the opposite wall. Bravo, mamma! I told father when we arrived home; he laughed, which is rare for him. Frances says she will not marry any man who does not propose to her personally and not to her parents. She says she is not an object of barter. I consider her a most advanced young woman. A serious row with Madame S. May it be the end, but I doubt it.

NOVEMBER 26

Father has been much vexed by some letters from Mr. Adams, who is now Secretary of State. It is all on account of the seizure of a French ship called the Apollon in the St. Mary's River on the Spanish side, for evading the navigation laws. Father thinks it is a high-handed action and unjustifiable. He has taken his own line with the French Government in entire opposition to Mr. Adams. What amazed Mr. Adams was that father wrote to him that he considered his argument of the case, as well as his own, not worth a straw. At times there certainly is an extraordinary contradiction. Undoubtedly father has far superior talent to Mr. Adams, and likes playing the latter as a cat does a mouse. Father, although he never admits it, I am certain feels very deeply the gross injustice and prejudice that shuts the door of the Presidency to him simply because he was not born in America. Although he tries to disguise it, he has a strong belief in the superiority of European intellect. He looks upon the American-born politicians as a lot of rough colts who want breaking in. Not one of them has had the early training that he has—brought up, as he was, among the flower of intellectual men. The Americans have great intellect and brains but they are untrained. What can be expected of them?

DECEMBER 25

Christmas again. We are having a large party for Frances. Already three fathers have appeared in orthodox costume to formally demand her hand for their respective sons. She will have none of them. The Duchesse de Broglie has pressed one suit, but Frances is obstinate. I tell her she must not be too particular.

DECEMBER 26

Everything went off very well. Now that Frances has grown up we have put aside fooling, but really it is not half as amusing. Our cousins the Gallatins are giving a Twelfth-Night party for Frances.

DECEMBER 31

I have been counting up my money for my étrennes to-morrow. I will have exactly 150 left after all the servants are tipped. It is a bad custom. Mamma always has a nest-egg, so I will have to draw on her. Good-bye, Old Year. Off to an old-fashioned réveillon. Dear old diary! Much as I have confidence in your discretion, I will not record where I am going or who my companions are to be.

JANUARY 1, 1822

We are quite worn out with all the duties we have had to perform. The long time we are kept standing at Court is most trying. The King paid marked attention to father yesterday, so did Monsieur. The Duchesse d'Angoulême, who on many occasions has noticed Frances, asked if it was true that she was fiancée.

To-night a ball at the Palais Royale.

Monsieur de Richelieu looks very ill. He is still pursued by the Queen of Sweden, it is really too absurd; she makes him as well as herself the laughing-stock of Paris. We are bidden to a reception at Madame Récamier's for the 10th. Madame Bonaparte arrives in a few days.

JANUARY 11

A delightful evening at Madame Récamier's. The funniest sight was the Queen of Sweden; she was dressed in a most extraordinary manner—I never saw a person so absolutely out of place; she looks more fit to be behind the counter of a tallow-chandler's than in a salon. We have had some very nice Americans here lately. A Mr. Ogle-Taylor and Mr. Livingstone, both men of education and polished manners; the latter was very anxious for me to go to Italy with him, but I could not be spared.

JANUARY 12

Madame Bonaparte dined with us yesterday, she is really more brilliant than ever, a little embittered perhaps, particularly against the Catons, they are her bête noire for the moment. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Robert Patterson, née Caton, came in for her full share. It seems that the Duke of Wellington writes to her every week, and there is much scandal about their relationship.

Father has told Madame Bonaparte there will always be a couvert for her at our table. We were all rather astonished at this, for he does not often show such marked hospitality, particularly to Americans. He feels very sorry for her, and thinks she has been badly treated; that she is a woman of brilliant intellect, but that her troubles have quite ruined what might have been a most delightful personage, as well as a power.

JANUARY 13

Fine skating in the Bois de Boulogne to-day. I took Frances; she got on wonderfully well as she had learned to skate in America when she was a child. She looked very lovely, mamma dresses her so well. With the exercise of skating she had the most brilliant colour in her cheeks. One horrible old woman went up to her and rubbed her cheeks with her pocket-handkerchief, saying, "Tiens, ce n'est pas du rouge." I think some of the French ladies were shocked that mamma was not with us. Princesse Galitzin had kindly offered to chaperone Frances. It is really too absurd that now she is grown up she is not allowed to drive alone with me; it is not that either mamma or father object, but it would be considered quite wrong, the argument being that everybody did not know that I was her brother. In fact, I cannot walk with her alone, without one of our footmen following. A very fine ball at the Carillon-Latours. I very much pitied poor mamma, she had to sit waiting for Frances until the early hours of the morning.

JANUARY 14

The King has been failing very fast; they say for the moment he is very much better. A ball at Court on the 16th. In fact, I do not think there is a single night that we are not engaged till Lent. Madame Bonaparte takes great interest in Frances, and says with her beauty she ought to make a great marriage. I fear the latter has but little ambition.

JANUARY 15

Mr. Crawford is urging father to return to America, as he wants him to use his influence for the vote of the State of Pennsylvania for the Presidency. Father has not the slightest intention of doing so, and does not think Crawford has the slightest chance. The President wishes father to remain in Paris, and he willingly agrees to this.

In fact, I think he wants to hold himself aloof from politics in America. He often talks of building a fine house in New Geneva; he already has a small brick one there. I cannot understand this new idea of his: to wish to bury himself in the wilds of Western Virginia; to take poor mamma there after the life she has led in Paris. She detests the country; of course we never disagree with him or contradict anything he says. I think it may be sentiment. He pictures New Geneva as a new Eldorado. Of course Frances will marry. So will I. He cannot expect me to live in idleness in the backwoods of America. Practically he and mamma are to be quite alone. Albert may stop with them, but I doubt it. I had an odd letter from him yesterday. He evidently is in some entanglement with a farmer's daughter; he begs me not to mention it to anybody. It is so strange that he always liked low company. It is a great pity, I think, that father did not send him to Geneva to be educated. The people he mixes with are of the lowest class, totally without education or manners. I cannot understand where he inherits his low tastes from, certainly not from father's family; nor have I ever heard of a Nicholson who was not a gentleman. Albert has a brain, in fact in his way is very clever. I fear now it's too late to make any change in him.

JANUARY 16

I took Madame de R. into supper last night at the Russian Embassy. She is very witty and does not hesitate to express her opinion in the most clear terms à mauvaise langue. I am rather afraid of her. During our conversation I asked her if she knew the reason why Madame X. had such success: the very best people fighting for invitations to her entertainments, although she had neither beauty nor wit, was really dull and vulgar. "There you are wrong," she answered. "She has much more than wit or beauty, tact. When I dine or sup with her, she puts my reigning amant on my right and the one

I hope to succeed him on my left. What does a woman want more? Now do you wonder at her success?"

FRIDAY

Mrs. Robert Patterson dined with us on Thursday; she is really beautiful and has a wonderful charm of manner. Her one topic of conversation is the Duke of Wellington. They say he allows her 100,000 francs a year; at least so says Madame Bonaparte. Her jewels are very fine. Madame B. says they are mostly imitation, but I think it is a case of sour grapes.

JANUARY 18

Father has refused the office of President of the Bank of the United States, which was kindly offered to him. He has the fixed idea in his head to lead an absolutely retired life when he returns to America. I can hardly credit it and think it is but a passing fancy. Monsieur de Lafayette, Pozzo di Borgo, all beg him to remain in Paris.

JANUARY 20

I took Frances to a ball at the Gay de Lussacs' last night, mamma was not well. She had written to the Comtesse de Gallatin if she would chaperone Frances. On our arrival I could not find any of the Gallatin family, and really did not know what to do—at 12 o'clock the Countess appeared. It seems that they had a bad accident, one of the horses having fallen, dragging the other one with it and overturning the coach; one of her daughters was badly cut on the neck and face. She made all haste, after her daughter had been attended to, to come to the ball, on account of Frances—it was most kind of her. I would not allow her to stop late as I know she must be anxious to get home, so we retired at 1 o'clock.

JANUARY 21

Skating all day; it is an exercise I love. Had a bad fall with Katinka Galitzin, and am sorry to say that the blade of my skate tore her coat and cut her arm. After her mother had bound it up, she insisted on returning to the ice and skated until dark. If the frost holds we are going to have a grand fête de nuit on the ice in a couple of days; the Duc and Duchesse d'Orléans have promised to be present; a quête will be made for charity.

JANUARY 22

Louise, of kitten fame, gave birth to a fine boy yesterday. I am the parrain and Frances the marraine. Mamma does not approve but father does. Of course we asked him first and mamma never goes against his will.

JANUARY 24, 1822

The frost held; in fact it is freezing still. The fête de nuit was a grand success. It was beautifully arranged on the Petit Lac. Wreaths and wreaths of lanterns made it quite light enough to see everything and everybody. Sledges in every shape and form hung with lanterns. Some with most grotesque heads. The Duc and Duchesse d'Orléans and the Duc de Chartres arrived at 9 o'clock. They were conducted to a raised platform on which was a species of divan covered with fine fur rugs. All fashionable Paris was there as it was a novelty. I was on the committee of arrangement. We had hired some Swedish skaters to give a performance in costume, which they did at 10.30. We had a retraite au lanterne, over six hundred joined in it; everybody had a stick with a Chinese lantern on it. Some of the men had poles of wood about two feet from each shoulder with lanterns on each end. There were fifty men two by two holding bentwood frames with lanthorns, two fine military bands played, and, for the retraite, we had the Corps de Chasse from Compiegne and Fontainebleau. The royalties retired at 11.30. A most successful fête. The proceeds collected amounted to about 7000 francs. I forgot to mention we had coloured fires burning at intervals: red, green and yellow. All the way from the Petit Lac, at an interval of four feet apart, were stationed soldiers holding blazing torches to light the way, this extended as far as the Champs Elysées.

JANUARY 25

I was so tired this morning, and stiff from skating. Father had some writing for me to do. I took it over to a table in a window in his room. I made a brave start but I suppose I was overcome with fatigue and the warmth of the room combined. I was awakened by the sound of the gong for déjeuner. I found a cushion had been placed under my head. Father stood by me smiling, and said, "I hope you had a good sleep, my petit vaurien." I made every excuse, but he only laughingly said, "Come to breakfast, and finish your writing this afternoon."

JANUARY 27

Mamma called me into her boudoir this morning; she said she wished to have a serious conversation with me. She began by asking why I had not written to my aunt, Mrs. Montgomery, in America; that I had neglected her terribly, &c. &c. Now as I had never written to this respected lady in my life, I was at a loss for an answer. By degrees it all came out. It seems that Mrs. Montgomery is rich, has no heir; mamma thought I might stand a chance. I at once consented to do so. I wrote a letter in a burlesque style. Knowing Mrs. M. to be a violent republican, I abused and ridiculed everything that had to do with a republic; that I hoped Americans would come to their senses and have a king; that I hoped that I never would be obliged to return to the land of the free. I showed the letter to mamma. After reading it she stamped her foot, a bad sign, and threw the letter

I had taken so much pains with into the fire. I don't think she will ever ask me to write another. I hate humbug and don't want anybody's money.

JANUARY 29

Madame Patterson Bonaparte dined with us yesterday, as well as her sister, Mrs. Robert Patterson. Mathieu de la Rochefoucauld, the Alfieris and several others. Madame B. was as usual brilliant, and kept the whole table alive with her witticisms. Pozzo di Borgo, who was also one of the guests, said, "Really, Madame Bonaparte, you should have been a man: you would have been a diplomatist."

FEBRUARY 1

Very serious trouble I fear is brewing for me with Madame S. If this diary falls into the hands of any young man beginning his career, may I warn him never to have an intrigue with a married woman.

Off to Fontainebleau to hunt to-morrow.

FEBRUARY 3

We had a poor day, as it had frozen hard in the night. I stuck one pig, quite a youngster, who squealed like a baby. A very large party. The usual "curée." Nothing very much to record. I had to leave early this morning, as I knew there would be business for me to attend to for father.

FEBRUARY 5

The King is now entirely in the power of Madame du Cayla;* he does nothing without asking her advice. There has been a great deal of intriguing about the post of Archbishop of Paris. Monsieur du Quellon, I believe, will be appointed, he is very young for such a post.

* Zoë Talon, Comtesse du Cayla, born 1784, died 1850, daughter of a secret agent employed before the Restoration. Mistress of Louis XVIII, whom she dominated.

ALBERT GALLATIN
PAINTED BY MADAME MEUNIER-ROMILLY, GENEVA, JANUARY, 1815

FEBRUARY 7

Mr. Astor has been pressing father to accept the Presidency of the United States Bank, but he will not hear of it. He had rather a disagreeable experience to-day. Some most extraordinary Americans called. The rule is for them simply to write their names and addresses, but they insisted upon seeing father. He received them with great civility, but the moment they commenced to speak I gauged what sort of people they were. They did not request father to present them at Court, but absolutely demanded it as a right. Now he has made it a rule not to present anybody unless they hold some distinguished position in their own country. These people were absolutely impossible. Father quietly but firmly said, "I regret not being able to present you." They demanded the reason why in the most insolent manner. Father rang the bell, and when the footman appeared simply said, "Show these gentlemen to the door." They commenced to use the most disgraceful language. I with the help of Mr. Sheldon insisted upon their leaving. Father with a bow left the room by another door. It is really dreadful he should be subjected to such indignity. He has now given an order that in future nobody is to be ushered into his presence without first being interviewed by Mr. Sheldon or myself.

FEBRUARY 12

There seem to be internal troubles all over France. Monsieur is suspected of starting the agitation. They say the Duc d'Orléans is also stirring up discontent. I do not even intend looking at the Carnival this year, much less taking part in it. I suppose I have sown about one-half or, say, three-quarters of my wild oats. I am glad that father and I are on the best of terms, and I am quite convinced we always will be. Madame Bonaparte dines here continually; she is certainly a most delightful and entertaining person. I rarely hear her say an ill-of her husband; she certainly has reason in that quarter after the treatment she has received at his hands.

FEBRUARY 13

Father had a private audience of the King to-day. Accompanied him as I always do. To our amazement when we were ushered into the presence, Madame de Cayla was present and did not retire; she seems to hold absolute sway over him. He actually appealed to her for her opinion on matters political which she certainly had no knowledge of.

Driving home father expressed his disgust, and said it was high time he abdicated if he was governed by a woman. It has always been the same thing with the Bourbons; in their old age some intriguing woman has governed them.

Very cold: if the frost holds we will have skating to-morrow.

FEBRUARY 15

I have been skating the last two days on the Petit Lac. .

FEBRUARY 17

Katinka Galitzin was married to-day to Caumont Force. The contract for the marriage was signed last night. A great crush, splendid corbeille de mariage. The family jewels, which are those of the Duc de la Force magnificent. There were two ceremonies, a Russian one in the Chapel of the Embassy, and the Catholic one at St. Pierre de Chailiot. I was present at both. I will miss her very much as we were really such good friends. I will always have a soft spot in my heart for her.

FEBRUARY 20

is graceful. He moves under the absolute sway of Lady Conyngham. I was weak enough last night to allow myself to be dragged off to a supper. I am glad to say I was hooded and returned home early. I think father was rather shocked when he was told that Pozzo di Borgo was on the Committee of "Crockfords," but Russians are all born gamblers. It seems that immense fortunes change hands nightly at this establishment, which is in St. James's Street, opposite Mr. White's. The man who started in was already realized a large fortune. Some of the heavy gamblers wear large straw hats, pulled well over their eyes: this is to conceal their features so that no one can see their expression when they are winning or losing. Thank God, I have not the slightest temptation to gamble—about my one and only virtue. Here in Paris play is not so very high, and is not indulged in by the higher classes to any very great extent. Lent is here, which means quiet and plenty of leisure. I am now studying banking systems, both English, American and French. The Alexander Barings come to us to-morrow for a week. They are both so charming. It is a great pleasure for mamma to have Mrs. Baring as she is an American and so sympathetic. He and father are always engaged in financial questions in which they are both absorbed.

MAY 18*

The Duc de Richelieu has been looking very ill, but died suddenly yesterday. He had come from Versailles to Paris the day before. His sister was with him. Several doctors were called in, but without avail. He died gently in his sleep. Father is much distressed as he had the highest opinion of him, of his wonderful honesty, and of his devotion to France.

The Queen of Sweden is making herself quite ridiculous. The Duc only spoke to her twice in his life. She has even been to the King with her lamentations.

MAY 30

The Duc d'Angoulême is the only member of the Royal family who seems to show any regret. It is disgusting that he gave his life to his country.

I have had my own troubles lately—result, a boy which Father in his large-minded manner has provided for. Madame S. is to live in Switzerland, her husband has repudiated her. Was there ever such a father as mine? He has never mentioned the matter to me but, after he had arranged everything, last night on retiring to my room, I found a letter on my table. It was couched in the kindest terms. He informed me he had settled everything, and that the subject would never be mentioned by him, that mamma was in total ignorance of it. God bless him!

The question of the navigation with the United States has been discussed in the Chamber. Father is not quite satisfied. Monsieur de Chateaubriand seems to ignore everything. He has not even answered our notes lately. It is really very exasperating. Nearly six years wasted.

JUNE 2

We have organized a new form of amusement; at least the Gay de Lussacs promulgated the idea. We drive out to St. Germain leaving Paris about 5 o'clock. A picnic dinner at the Pavillon Henri Quatre, then dancing, singing &c., until 10.30, then a drive home by moonlight. Several of Frances' friends. Mamma took two very nice American girls, Misses Thorne, the Gallatins, and their daughter. The English Ambassador brought a...

the Queen of Sweden is making herself quite ridiculous.
The Duc only spoke to her twice in his life. She has even been to the King with her lamentations.

MAY 30

The Duc d'Angoulême is the only member of the Royal family who seems to show any regret. It is disgusting that he gave his life to his country.

I have had my own troubles lately—result, a boy who either in his large-minded manner has provided for Madame S. is to live in Switzerland, her husband has repudiated her. Was there ever such a father as mine who has never mentioned the matter to me but, after I had arranged everything, last night on retiring to my room, I found a letter on my table. It was couched in the kindest terms. He informed me he had settled everything, and that the subject would never be mentioned by him, that mamma was in total ignorance of
it. God bless him!

The question of the navigation with the United States has been discussed in the Chamber. Father is not quite satisfied. Monsieur de Chateaubriand seems to ignore everything. He has not even answered our notes lately.
This is really very exasperating. Nearly six years waste

JUNE 2

We have organized a new form of amusement; at least the Comte de Lussacs promulgated the idea. We drive out at St. Germain leaving Paris about 5 o'clock. A picnic dinner at the Pavillon Henri Quatre, then dancing, singing, &c., until 10.30, then a drive home by moonlight. Several of Frances' friends. Mamma took two very nice American girls, Misses Thorne, the Gallatins, and their daughter
The English Ambassador's daughter.

feel now as free as the air, since I have got rid of Madam
.: it may be ingratitude, but I always feel so ashamed
f myself. I believe most of the French mamma refused at first to join the St. Germain parties, but believe before long we will have many more joinin
s. My miniature is very good and I have given i o mamma.

JUNE 3

Just after déjeuner to-day we heard a great noise in the servants' quarters. As it continued mamma rang an Monsieur Caron the maître d'hôtel appeared, crimson i face. He begged that I would be allowed to come down and see what had happened: the spectacle that met m eyes when I reached the kitchen is indescribable. Poor Mamie Kitty, the nigger cook, had made some waffle for déjeuner; one of the footmen, out of sheer mischief had taken the remainder of the paste, and with the aid o two of the kitchen wenches, who had held Mamie, the had smeared her head and face with the white homin paste and had sprinkled flour over it, turning her into white woman. She lost her temper and when she was fre made a dash for him and literally had torn his cloth off. There he was, clothed as he came into the work standing behind a large table, while Mamie was tryin to belabour him with a rolling-pin. The moment I spok to her she dropped the pin and went on her knees an began saying, "Oh Jesus forgive a poor nigger." If had not been so pathetic I would have laughed.
seemed to sober all the servants who were assemble
I told her to get up, and taking her by the hand took h straight upstairs to mamma. The poor old dear w Mamma made her tell her stor

the rest of the day. Father will interview all those who took part to-morrow and will see that the delinquents are punished. I felt so sorry for her as she kept repeating, 'I am only a poor old nigger and God made me black. I am a miserable old sinner.'

JUNE 4

Much to our surprise Monsieur and Madame d'Osmond have bidden us to dinner for the 10th. Mamma is quite hurried, as she says she has worn all her frocks out and she has no time to have one arranged. Father gave her five hundred francs and said, "Get yourself and Frances the finest 'war paint' that that can purchase." The young footman was very contrite and begged not to be dismissed. Father told him he must apologize to Mamie Kitty and beg her pardon before all the servants, and that he would be present—the footman, George by name, did so, and the poor old woman threw her arms around his neck and gave him two ringing kisses: I think he was sufficiently punished.

JUNE 5

At the opera last night I spied a charming and mysterious-looking lady in a frilled beignoir. Every time I looked at her she put up her fan, but I saw her peeping between the sticks. I waited at the finish close to the exit of her loge; she made the slightest sign to me, the very slightest for me to follow her. In the crowd I saw her put her hand behind her back. I edged near to her and saw there was a piece of paper in it; watched my opportunity, and covering her hand took it. As soon as I got the chance I opened the little three-cornered note, only a few lines—"28 rue Boissy d'Anglas—minuit demain." I am sorely puzzled. I thought I had found a letter to me, but I had a batch of letters to copy this morning which kept me very busy. Mr. Crawford is still writing to father begging him to come home, on account of the elections. The latter says if he does so he will be again drawn into political life, which is undesirable. I am thinking of to-night and wondering. I met some of my intimates this afternoon, but thought it wiser not to mention my adventure to them. I am dining at the Café Anglais with Guy de Montesquieu and the lady he protects. We look in at the opera to while away the time till midnight.

JUNE 6

I am disgusted with myself. On the tiptoe of expectation I arrived at No. 28. All was darkness. I waited for a few moments, when the small door of the porte-cochère opened and a hand beckoned me in. The moment the door closed there was a brilliant light, two footmen in the hall, and I saw several other cloaks and hats: the mystery was soon solved, tout bonnement—a gambling-house. I was ushered into a superb salon, the rattling of dice assailed my ear and my charmer stepped forward to greet me. I might have known, as the police are so down on maisons de jeu at present. Not a soul I had ever seen before: that struck me as quite extraordinary. I must be getting old! No more aventures galantes seem to come in my way. I did not play and soon retired, evidently much to the disgust of my hostess.

JUNE 10

We have been very quiet for the last few days. To-day is the dinner at the Osmonds'. Albertine de Broglie came to déjeuner to-day to eat American food. I do not think she really cared for it, but was too polite to say so.

must acknowledge the dinner at the Osmonds' was superb. We were forty and the fine fleur of society. Madame de Boigne in her own house is an excellent hostess. She escorted a very pretty woman to dinner—a Comtesse de Thabot: she had passed much of her life in England and longed to go back there to live, which is rare for a Frenchwoman. Lady Westmoreland, a handsome Lady Anne, the English Ambassador, a son of the Countess of Sutherland, whom I met at Coppet, I think it was in 1811. After dinner, which lasted three mortal hours, we retired to the ball-room. There was a raised estrade, and Malibran sang. I went rather late to the Spanish Embassy. Father was too tired to go. A great crowd came "Nuncio" as usual.

JUNE 14

We had one of our jaunts to St. Cloud yesterday, a much larger company and most enjoyable.

JUNE 15

Very hot, I sat at Tortoni's until supper-time eating ices and creams, which I really think made me hotter.

JUNE 20

A catastrophe this morning: poor mamma sprained her ankle and will not be able to move for at least a month. Her feet are very small, and as she is short she wears very high heels—not being quite as light as she was her ankles easily turn. Countess de Gallatin called to-day. She is getting up some little plays and wants to enlist Frances and myself in her company. Father gave his permission for Frances. I have never acted, but am going to see what I can do. I am cast for a little play called "Ursule in 1815." I am to be the heroine.

Our first rehearsal to-day. I fear we all laughed so much that little progress was made. I have to kiss two of the girls—my daughters. This we did not rehearse.

JUNE 24

Second rehearsal to-day. It went much better as now we have some idea of our rôles. There is no doubt father intends going home soon. I will be glad in one way, but very sorry to leave my beloved Paris. Puységur and Montesquieu misbehaved so much to-day at rehearsal that Madame de Gallatin threatened to get substitutes for them—they both are very funny.

JUNE 25

A reception at the Palais Royal to-night and a Court ball on the 29th. How sick I am of these entertainments. We have a dinner-party to-morrow. Mamma has a wheeled chair, so can be present. The invitations were launched before her accident.

Mormorsen had six more kittens to-day, father unknown. Glorious weather. I drove father for the first time in my curricule to-day. He enjoyed it very much. He and I dine at the English Embassy on Wednesday. Mamma has begged to be excused.

JUNE 26

The reception at the Palais Royal was far more amusing than I thought it would be: a great many English friends that the Orléans family had made in England. I ended in a dance.

JUNE 28

Our dinner was a great success. It was for the Osmonds. Father insisted that Monsieur de Lafayette should very grand ball at the Tuilleries. I enjoyed it although I was very fatigued, having rehearsed for four months.

JULY 2

A very long and stately dinner at the English Embassy. Mr. and Mrs. Baring were of the guests. Several metropolitan singers in the garden, sang during dinner. Sometimes I feel I never want to dine out again. Why do people want to meet together to eat?

JULY 4

Father received as usual all the Americans in Paris to-day of all sorts and all kinds—a motley crew. Buffet in the garden. I will go to bed early.

JULY 6

Our last rehearsal to-night—some people are coming so as to give us confidence. Very warm—Frances very excited. Mamma is a little nervous about her acting when she cannot be present. Father has promised to take her not only to-night but to-morrow as well. I am afraid she will be bored.

JULY 8

All went off capitally. In the first play Frances looked lovely and really acted so well. I saw father laughing. He was indeed a warrior bold. My six young ladies were none more charming than the other, unfortunately I was made up as an old man—that seemed to put them quite at their ease. Puységur drank too much champagne and forgot every word of his rôle, but I don't think the audience noticed it. We were all very merry.

Most people are leaving Paris now. Mamma's so much better that she drives out to St. Cloud and St. Germain. Hardly any entertaining. The Court is at St. Cloud. The Duchesse d'Angoulême loves it, but nothing will induce her to go to Versailles. I am not surprised—the memories would be terrible for her. The King is worse. Madame de Cayla absolutely rules him with a rod of iron. Albert has had measles, but is well again. My aunt Few went and fetched him to her home in Baltimore and nursed him. Mamma is still a little anxious about him. It takes so long to get an answer to a letter.

JULY 14

Intolerably hot. I have been to the baths in the Seine all day trying to keep cool. Our garden is nice with some shady trees.

JULY 16

Have been trying to read in the garden, but the combination of flies and the heat was too much for me, so I darkened my room and went to sleep. After supper mamma allowed me to take Frances for a drive—we had to return post-haste as there was every indication of a violent thunderstorm. We only just got in in time. It is an extraordinary thing but the only fear I have ever seen father show is that of lightning. He was waiting anxiously on the perron for our return. He had had some leather beds brought into the centre drawing-room. All windows were closed and the shutters shut. He insisted on mamma going in and there we sat for three mortal hours, stifling. It certainly was one of the worst mamma and Frances leave to-day for Fontainebleau when they go to the de Lussacs' (she was an American and an old friend of mamma's), afterwards to pay some visit in the Loire. I stop with father. My arm has been very painful lately. I must have it examined again.

JULY 20

Our old nigger, Mamie, is quite well again, the chef is going for a holiday and she is going to cook for us—she will be quite alone she will not have too much work to do.

JULY 23

Still this horrible heat; I can do nothing. I feel like wringing out dish-cloth. . . .

JULY 25

A little cooler. Have been putting all father's proofs of his pamphlet in order and correcting them for him. I do not know how he manages it. He is always cool and calm and serene. His is indeed a blessed nature.

JULY 26

To our astonishment Monsieur de Lafayette appeared last evening, full of mystery. He asked for hospitality, which father was only too pleased to extend to him. His baggage consisted of a large roll of green canvas tied with a thick cord. He is very funny.

JULY 30

Great heat again. Monsieur Lafayette still here. He hardly goes out at night. He is plotting something. Not much to do in Paris, and those who are here do not show themselves. I sat outside. The evening will be still.

Some annoying news from America: I sincerely hope father is not going to be dragged into politics again. He is not so strong as he was, but his brain seems to be even more active.

AUGUST 6

Nothing to record. Absolute monotony. Everything at a standstill. I am getting so fat. Mamie Kittredges feeds us on all sorts of fattening things.

AUGUST 8

Monsieur de Lafayette left hurriedly to-day. About 10.30 this evening two mysterious noisy men sent in a note to father. He received them alone: what transpired I do not know, but he seemed greatly annoyed. . . .

AUGUST 9

Father sent this morning his confidential servant to Mr. Parker's to try and get Monsieur de Lafayette's address. He evidently wishes to warn him of some impending danger.

AUGUST 11

I could have had an aventure galante, but it is too hot.

AUGUST 13

I had a bad attack of indigestion, am dieting on peaches—they are so plentiful now after the abnormal hot weather.

AUGUST 17

Horrible nettlerash. I cannot get any sleep, sent for the physician; he says it was caused by the peaches. He has put me on milk and barley-water.

AUGUST 19

ordered some new surtouts for the autumn, four pair of pantaloons and three silk vests—one striped the other with flowers.

AUGUST

Another shock, Lord Castlereagh that was, now Lord Londonderry, committed suicide on the 12th at Northey. He seemed perfectly well: dressing for breakfast cut an artery in his arm; there was no reason for such an act, political or otherwise. They say there is hereditary madness in the family. Father had the greatest respect for him. He had always been just in all his dealings, so large-minded, and his word was to be depended upon.

We remain in Paris all the summer, mamma and Francis are paying visits in the country. . . .

SEPTEMBER 15: CHATEAU DU ROSEY ROLE

Father insists upon my coming here. He put it on the plea that he wanted me to attend to some business in Geneva for him, but I know he thought I was dull alone with him. I did not like leaving him, but as he has Monsieur de Lafayette and several other friends I consented. It is lovely here and I am very glad to be with my cousins. They make me feel more like a dwarf than ever, they are so colossal. They have planned a trip to Chamouni for me. Adrian Naville is to be of the party—we are going in a few days.

SEPTEMBER 17

We went yesterday to Allaman and slept at the château. My cousins the de Sellons were so glad to see us; they have one whole side of the château reserved for us.

have a son* with an enormous head, and one daughter who is very handsome. Another sister of M^{onsieur} de Sellaon's is the Duchesse de Clermont-Tonnerre, whom we see so much of in Paris.

SEPTEMBER 19: CHAMOUNIX

We started early yesterday morning, a glorious day. Mules met us and we reached here by the Tête Noire Pass. A most beautiful road. Only one guide. A very famous one who has made the ascent of Mont Blanc eleven times. His name is Jacques Balmat. To-day we have been to the Mer de Glace, a rather fine but dirty glacier. We remain here till Friday.

SEPTEMBER 20

We have made several more ascents of moderate mountains. My cousins are far more keen on finding some chamoix to shoot. We saw several; they are very difficult to approach and I only secured two. I am going to have one of the heads stuffed as a trophy. The inn is very modest, good beds, and the food very eatable but simple. In fact, we are always ravenous, the air gives such splendid appetite. Very few tourists. Some English, who seem to be doing the ascents more as a task than a pleasure. A French honeymoon couple who are most amusing. They seem to imagine they are quite alone here.

SEPTEMBER 22: GENEVA

I left Chamounix with great regret. The Navilles insisted on our paying them a visit of a few days. I have been to see my cousins the Diodatis. Lord Byron occupied the villa for several years and wrote several of his poems there. They tell many funny stories and some very odd ones about him, not quite fit for my diary.

We posted here to-day from Geneva and are stopping the night. Such a truly hearty welcome from the Croglies and Auguste de Staël. The Duchesse de Luyne and Monsieur Rocca* are here. It seems so strange to be in this house and no Madame de Staël. Every time the door opens I expect to see her enter. We leave to-morrow for Du Rosey.

SEPTEMBER 26

A large shooting party arranged in the Jura to-morrow. Blackcock is the principal game. We start at daylight which is about 3 o'clock.

SEPTEMBER 28

A delightful day and really quite a large bag. Twenty-eight blackcock, sixteen miscellaneous birds, four foxes, seventeen hares, two rats. A picnic-luncheon and more champagne than was good for us; this was in my honour.

SEPTEMBER 29

Leave to-morrow for Saconnex to pay a visit to the Budés; my friend Jules writes to me to be discreet, that he is like a bird in a cage when at home. I will leave here with regret, but I must be making my way back to Paris. I feel it is my duty.

SEPTEMBER 30

Monsieur Du Rosey and his sons accompanied me part of the way and Eugène and Jules de Budé met me and drove me here. Jules confided in me that they were going to have a soirée in my honour, adding "Mais les jeunes filles ne sont pas même décolletées." He is incorrigible. After an excellent supper and a most genuinely hearty welcome I retired early. I am so tired.

The soirée after all was very amusing. Notwithstanding the jeunes filles wore bright spencers they were so perfectly natural and so thoroughly enjoyed themselves. They have far more liberty than French girls. I think I must take to myself a Swiss wife!

OCTOBER 7: DIJON

After a really charming visit I left Saconnex, slept one night in Geneva. What delicious Burgundy is obtainable here! It is such a delicate wine that transport changes the flavour. I have a very pleasant travelling companion who is on his way to the Embassy in Paris; he has been at Berne and has risen a step—his name is Cornwallis. He has not borrowed any money from me as yet, so I believe he is genuine.

OCTOBER 14: PARIS

After several halts, arrived last night. Father very well. He was pleased to see me back. I found plenty of work to do, and have been hard at it all day. Matters political in America are anything but satisfactory. Unless there is some radical change, I hope we will not return. Albert has written that the new house is in process of building. As there is no architect to superintend it I fear it will be a strange building. Father has sent out marble mantel-pieces, &c. I dare not say so, but rather out of place in Western Virginia. I told how in Geneva all his relations hoped he would return there and settle down. When I told him this there was a wistful look in his eyes.

OCTOBER 16

We can do so little now as the Government is entirely taken up with the war with Spain. At first it was absolutely no work to do, always the same life here. I can hardly realize we have been here for six years. I have quite made up my mind not to remain with another Minister. I feel I ought to be "up and doing" and to make a career for myself.

OCTOBER 19

I have persuaded father to take a good rest, and he has consented. Having remained in Paris all summer he is looking very white and tired. To my great pleasure I proposed that we (he and I) should go to Bourg and see the fine Palace of Jacques Cœur—this has been a pleasure long postponed.

OCTOBER 20

We are going in our own coach. I have to-day seen about the relays of horses. Father takes his man Cardon and I take Lucien. It is a good four days' journey.

OCTOBER 25

It has indeed repaid us to come here. I never realized what Renaissance architecture was, and what a wonderful man was Cœur—almost a magician. His origin is hardly known—but at one time the richest man in France, until Charles VII stripped him of his fortune to carry on his wars against the English, then by way of gratitude threw him into a prison on a trumped-up charge of poisoning Agnes Sorel, the former's mistress. He was absolved of this charge. Went to the East and made another fortune. One of his daughters married Anthème, their daughter Agnes a Tudert, and Sarah Tudert a Gallatin, our direct ancestor.

OCTOBER 26

much of interest. The auberge is very clean—good beer and food. The place is absolutely a city of the dead. I go to bed at 10 o'clock.

OCTOBER 27

We have made a few excursions in the environs to-day. It is not a very pretty country. I have not seen a single pretty woman—how do the men exist?

OCTOBER 28

We are leaving for Paris to-morrow by an entirely different route which he has mapped out. I have thoroughly enjoyed this quiet time with him, he is always interesting and I know that I can always learn something from him which improves me. For the first time, he has mentioned his first wife to me. She evidently was the real love of his life. They were only married a few months when she died. Now I understand why he wishes to return to Western Virginia: she died and was buried there. I do not think he has ever mentioned her name to mamma. Her memory is a sort of sacred cult to him. It seems there was no doctor within reach. He dared not leave her, and she died in great suffering in his arms.

NOVEMBER 4

Back again and settled down to work. Mamma and Frances returned this morning. They have been all the summer on the Loire paying visits. Frances looks so well. Mamma's temper is slightly uncertain—her first remark to me was: "How your hair has fallen out." "Let me look at your teeth; they're going too." I replied with a Chesterfieldian bow, "We are all here, my dear mamma." She snapped "Yes."

that will put her in a good humour. It is wonderful what a soothing effect the prospect of a new frock has upon the female mind. They will sell their very sonnet for a new bonnet.

NOVEMBER 6

We were much surprised this morning in receiving a invitation from the Duchesse de Berri for a soirée intime in her apartments in the Tuilleries on the 8th. This was the first invitation she has honoured us with since the death of the Duke.

NOVEMBER 8

We dined at the English Embassy yesterday—a very large company. The Marquis and Marquise d'Osmond, who have just returned from London where he has held the post of French Ambassador for a long time. There were some rather odd stories about Madame d'Osmond. Madame de Boigne, their daughter, has taken a large hôtel in the Rue Bonaparte. Her mother and father are to live with her, not that she needs a chaperon. The Duchesse de Courland was another of the guests. She renewed her attentions to father; I suppose they must now know that Pozzo di Borgo hoaxed her. I sat next such a pretty English girl; she was so bright and cheerful. I believe she is a niece or daughter of Lord Clanricarde. Another charming girl was a Miss Edwards, daughter of Lord Somebody, whose name I did not catch. She took a great fancy to Frances and asked to be allowed to call to see her. Mamma told her she would be delighted to receive her.

The gardens of the embassy are beautiful. The hôtel* is in the Faubourg St. Honoré, and the garden runs up to the Champs-Élysées. I believe the English after the Revolution. Why is it so many English have those rabbit teeth? it quite spoils their

NOVEMBER 9

The soirée at the Duchesse de Berri's was She had a band of Neapolitan singers and costume, a great novelty for Paris. The d'Angoulême was present and was more unbe I have ever seen her before. I do not think approved of the sans façon style of the ente Neither the Duc nor Monsieur were present. Th de Berri has grown fat, but has improved in She is very loud, was dressed abominably an her figure. Many lovers are assigned to her, believe half I hear. The Duc and Duchesse were both present, all was over at 1 o'clock. until midnight, when supper was served. Th so very dirty, it has not been cleaned for year the Royal Family are all moving to St. Clou Tuilleries is to be entirely cleansed. I am not healthy.

NOVEMBER 10

I am seriously thinking of going in for the Service. Commencing as I have at such an I have already acquired some useful knowledge hopes that a regular Diplomatic Service will be in America the same as in other countries. I believe I would always be employed by the Go Some relations sent mamma some live terr Baltimore. Frances and I took out two into and tried to make them race—Frances's won. to cheer them up after their long sea voyage.

NOVEMBER 12

1822] DIARY

for a few days, and the house — he is ve that he has some r Baring for several just come that the Court was to have postponed.

NOVEMBER 13

A fine day at last,
out a regular cours macy. I shut my from 9 until 12. I gave the first sittin
Had two teeth draw
Mrs. Robert Patte of Wellesley, the Lord-Lieutenant o burst with envy.

NOVEMBER 16

Miss Edwards an
the former is a da
Francis have str

DIARY OF JAMES GAIL

He is making me some coats and p latest fashion. I must either eat less bone belt. Alfred is in despair; he takes all the soul out of his creations. I and has confessed to me -- this time it is and the husband has found everything has discovered an old nigger cook, a and has promptly engaged her. Simply Maryland chicken, buckwheat cakes
I eat much of this fare, no whalebone in bounds and the great Alfred will co

NOVEMBER 20

There are extraordinary stories, more c immense sums that Madame du Cayla the poor King. Sosthène de la Rochef some say is still, her lover; he has ca her disgraceful intrigues against the C Duc de Richelieu had the greatest c and did not disguise it. The last scandal c dotte, Queen of Sweden, is that when Richelieu went into the country she follo at all the auberges that he did. What is is that Bernadotte allowed her to be

1822] DIARY

now fallen violently her behaviour in is an extremely u known as the hand

NOVEMBER 30, 18

This I fear will be Paris; as far as I Virginia this time change it will be,
me, at the age of si different from tha and excitement,
but sometimes I fe
age of twenty-five, accustomed to sin
routine of enjoym right - that I will glad to settle dow Naturally with hi
some good position to take me into hi seems to cling to probability we we

DIARY OF JAMES GA

Tried on four pairs pantaloons and Alfred is pleased that I am thinner. Father seems much disgusted by me. He has not told me what it is, but I with the Presidential Election. Mr. me a very friendly letter, asking me with regard to father, and hinting t new Cabinet would be found for him returned. I do not think this is quit both opposed in political opinions and parties. I cannot gauge his reason know in his heart of hearts he has a of father's ability. I have not men of the letter to father and will answer mitting myself in any way. I fully that it is quite useless to remain here wasted. Any one can fill the post as nothing to do. Father is deeply o some pamphlet, and so absorbed is I really believe he forgets he is in Fran

DECEMBER 6

Our poor old nigger, Mamie, had a lower limbs are paralysed. The doc Princess (this is Frances), a good fairy, a naughty boy (myself), a Prince and of all sizes. I have borrowed all sorts &c., from the property man at the op in her element with the dresses.

DECEMBER 8

First rehearsal to-day. Mamie Kitty has use of one leg--the guilty footman I met with a large bunch of violets. The French hearted. He said to me, "Excellence, c'est n'est-ce-pas?"

Skating again, but I have not been out

DECEMBER 9

Father had a long talk with me this morn quite decided to return in the spring to his new house will be completed and we will I will not remain there long.

DECEMBER 10

Have been skating all day. Bright sun and cold. Katinka Caumont la Force as ever. She seems very happy.

DECEMBER 12

No time now except for rehearsal--the play so I have offered a prize to the one who is quiet for ten minutes at a time. No one uch a pretty parane. The dancing mistress of the opera is teaching them. They are to be poudrées. All will be all "milk and water," but pretty. Many of my suggestions have been scouted with horror. The only person who backs me up at all is Pozzo di Borgo. He says: "Mais pourquoi pas?" He does not know mamma.

DECEMBER 16

skating all the morning. A thaw has set in. A venturesome Frenchman was boldly pushing one of the sledges with his fiancée in it, when crack went the ice and in three moments, only about two feet of water. Both shrieked "sauvés." We sensibly answered "walk to the bank." When they did manage to climb up, they were received by their respective mammas and papas, hugged and embraced as if they had escaped a great danger.

DECEMBER 16

obliged to go to a reception at the Spanish Embassy. My father insisted upon my accompanying him. A great crowd. The Orléans family were present. Talleyrand looked like an old rat. I hate the sight of him.

DECEMBER 21

My father has just had an official note that Monsieur de Montmorency has resigned from his post of Minister of Foreign Affairs and that Monsieur de Villèle is to keep

DECEMBER 23

All is now ready and our last rehearsal to-night. This morning Madame de Boi Duchesse d'Orléans had intimated to her like to see our little play. Of course father in person and apologized on the score that the little entertainment worthy of their R Begged they would honour him with They are all coming.

CHRISTMAS DAY

The pavane and fairy-tale were really far surpassed what I had expected. The in the play were a great novelty. They small fairies, which I had trained. We appeared riding a wee white donkey led by led off the applause, which was very I did look lovely and acted so well. After the Duc and Duchesse and Mademoiselle fire-place and we (the actors) all défilé. Their congratulations were very hearty.

DECEMBER 26

We had a quiet Christmas dinner—some that mamma had invited.

DECEMBER 28

I have promised to go to a supper to see

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

[18

DECEMBER 30

went with mamma to-day in a common coach. To-day she took all her New Year offerings to some poor Americans. She is so truly kind. Hampers of food, clothes, &c. &c. She did not even forget the children, and hampers for them all. Frances has a cold or would have gone with us. I dread a tedious dinner at the de la Rochefoucaulds'. All of us are bidden.

JANUARY 2, 1823

I have been too busy to write a line in my diary to-day. The usual Court défilé on New Year's Day. The King looking very ill and did not seem to take any interest in anything. Madame du Cayla triumphant by his side. It seemed such a strange thing, as if she were his wife. We dined with Pozzo di Borgo at the Embassy; nearly all Russians, a Monsieur Narishkin, the greatest noble Russian, but who bears no title, his card is simply "Narishkin." It is very strange, but Russians are only semi-civilized. Perfect manners, external polish—the moment they have just a little too much to drink, the savagery comes out. Very true the saying is, "Scratch the Russian and find the Tartar." Such a round of calls for the New Year commencing at the Palais Royale, all the Diplomatic Corps, &c.—it took us the whole day.

JANUARY 5

I have had a sore throat and not able to go out for the last three days. Disquieting letters from Albert in America.

1823] DIARY OF JAMES GALL

JANUARY 6

Katinka Galitzin (Chamont la Force) 1 night. Oddly enough the sex is not yet

JANUARY 8

My throat all right again. Miss Edward her arrival until the 12th. I go to Fe four days for the chase.

JANUARY 10: FONTAINEBLEAU

Perfect weather. We are a large party for the first time. The rage is now tables are set out directly after dinner at 8 o'clock. They play until 11.30 and is announced. The moment it is over the tables. The favourite game is "H invented I believe by the officers on the war in Boston Harbour. I, without being off to bed after supper as I do not gamb tedious.

JANUARY 12

Madame Carillon la Tour lost the skirt of to-day, it caught in a low bough of a tree torn off. There fortunately was a conc as we were near to the Grande Phara not appear at dinner. The daughter-in-l de Poix had an altercation at the gam slapped Madame de Montesquien's face

DIARY OF JAMES GALLA

She had made an appointment for me to meet her in her room after all was quiet in the house. I went in a large flowered damask dressing-gown (the old frock of mamma's) and sallied forth. All went well. I found the room; the door was ajar. Entering I locked it, the key snatched from me in the lock. Horror of horrors! No other exit. Too high for me to jump out of the window. They were at our wits' end; quoi faire? After some time I decided on a plan. Madame de L. was to come to the door the moment she heard the servant come in the morning. I was to lie perdu. She, when the door was opened, to go to her sister's room which was on the floor above, taking the servant with her. I waited until I emerged from the room. I saw several heads looking out of four doors, nothing doing. I had to make a bolt for it, which I did; I do not know who recognized me. As soon as I reached my room I lit the fire and burnt my dressing-gown as to the key, to be identified. I am now waiting events and am off to the chase.

JANUARY 15

Last evening at dinner Monsieur de Chancery asked, "Who has a red and green damask dressing-gown?" nobody responded. Tour du Pain said, "I have certainly have seen one," still no answer. Monsieur de Castries turned to me and said, "What colour is your dressing-gown?" I blandly answered "A gentlemen to retire and to put on their and to defile before the ladies." This turned to the salon. Shouts of laugh-Comte de Laval appeared in a dressing green and red stripes. He is the brother Brissac; she instantly said, "That is not large flowers of red, green and gold Castries instantly said, "You know pattern than anybody else, so it must your room that I saw the gentleman em-this morning." Madame de B. answered respect my age." This was received laughter.

JANUARY 16

Paris, arrived home late this afternoon with all haste to take mamma and Fran-at the Palais Royale. Father had intepany them, but he has had a cold. Ka-declared itself—it is a boy.

JANUARY 18

The concert very fine. Grande toilette.
Diplomatique; a host of English; the Cou-whom I had met at Coppet in 1815. She at once and was most gracious saying, "I call you Cupid." Father has bidden her to dinner for the 26th. Also the Duc d'Orléans and Mademoiselle. He has out a list of the people whom I think w fore we started. Letters from Albert not satisfactory. I am going to-morrow to consult Alfred about my costume for the 26th. It is very late and I have just finished drafting some dispatches to Mr. Rush. The letters were laid out on my table where I found them on my return from the opera. Mlle Favier looked with favour on me. I will send her some flowers to-morrow.

JANUARY 20

sent Mlle Favier some flowers, cost me 20 francs. I hidden in them a little "could I would she" billet-doux. I will await results.

JANUARY 21

no answer as yet. I will go to the opera to-night; so dancing. Father is disgusted with the childish behaviour of the French Ministry. If they would only give a decided answer one way or the other, he would know the position he stood in. Still no answer by note. Last night she did not even look at me. Billet thrown away.

JANUARY 22

All our guests have accepted for the 26th. The Emperor approved the list. In fact, I believe he never alters a list sent by an Ambassador or Minister of a foreign Power. We are having a tented room built over the garden for the music.

1823]

DIARY OF JAMES GALT

8 o'clock and the Orléans always stop v tine de Broglie has just offered the loan

JANUARY 24

Father has just put his veto on our using plate so kindly offered. He dislikes an or pretence in any way. Mamma is s went this afternoon and parted with a and literally laid some flowers at th
She was at home and received me me explained how I was situated and with begged me not to apologize but to cor next night. The louis was well spent not but feel sorry for the Bonapartists.
recognized. Even their showy titles r them. There is a son of the Emperor, a his mother was a Pole. He is quite yo lad, and is being well brought up. One the 26th is the Countess de Flahaut,
Her son was the lover of Queen Hort
Louis Bonaparte, King of Holland. S
Flahaut. The old Madame de Flahaut Bothelo, and is a very grand dame.
finest in Paris after the King's four t up behind. She looks like a mum Father sent for me this afternoon to patches for him in post-haste. I do hop to be drawn into political life again. I cently to mamma, "So Katinka's child i

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

[182

hold is not a very large one. Chevet is doing the main part of the cooking. Our Russian glass is very fine; it was a present to father from the Tsar Alexander. M. Favier was more than gracious. I will see more of her.

JANUARY 27

The banquet was very fine, and marked by great simplicity in comparison with those at the Russian, Spanish, and English Embassies. The Orléans did not leave until after midnight.

All the heads of the Corps Diplomatique were present with their ladies. The Marchioness of Stafford wore very magnificent, superb jewels. She is so absolutely simple and unaffected, but such a great lady. The dinner was excellent. Music just loud enough. Mamma radiant. The Duc d'Orléans speaks such perfect English and as she had the English Ambassador on her left she was quite at her ease. Monsieur de Lafayette, who is well received at the Palais Royale, was present. The Duc d'Orléans expressed great regret to both father and to mamma that we were returning to America. Father has only applied for six months' leave and will await the turn of events. Albert is most anxious for him to see the new home, which has cost far more than father had estimated.

JANUARY 29

As this is our last Carnival I am going to try to amuse myself, but I have not much heart for it. I frankly own I dread returning to America. I have no friends of my own here, none that have anything in common with the young Americans.

1823]

DIARY OF JAMES GAIL

Royal mistress, the Duchesse d'Angoulême that of the Duchesse de Berri, at our approach Madame de Duras said her Royal mistress has a desire to receive mamma and Frances privately not officially. The interview is on February 4. It is certainly most interesting. Father wishes to pay a short visit to France, but the weather is much too severe at present to undertake the journey. Frances is rather tired of her idea of returning to America. She wishes to see which young girls enjoy there. I cannot say that. Monsieur de Lafayette has informed me he intends paying his last visit to America. It is at least something to look forward to.

JANUARY 30

Easter is late this year. The Carnival lasts until the middle of next month. The King had a stroke to-day, but not yet recovered. Bonaparte very much annoyed with France without having married France's royal family.

FEBRUARY 2

Always some petty and annoying business from America framed by Mr. Adams. I recall his idle moments in writing them, simply on father for his imaginary grievance. A delightful letter from Mr. Rufus King nce held, and in everything they do, show their bad breeding. She says that there is not one of the Emperor's sisters who has not one or more illegitimate children and that they seem to glory in it instead of thinking it a disgrace. It seems last evening she was at the Russian Embassy when the Duc d'Orléans was announced. She at once tried to withdraw, but he met her at the door and made her a low bow saying, "Bon soir Princesse." I am certain she was flattered or she would not have repeated it. A dear old American woman called to-day; she has a great desire to see the King at close quarters. Father was so impressed by her simplicity and sincerity that he is going to arrange for her to be in one of the rooms his Majesty passes through. She is from the West and told father she had actually seen the Dauphin there (Louis XVII), that he had been brought up by some Indians who had turned Christian. Father was much interested as she described the clothes he had worn when he came to America. All of the finest quality that he himself could not remember anything beyond a prison, a mob and a very beautiful mother—also great grief. If he is not the Dauphin (which father doubts) he must be the child of some great noble who was guillotined during the French revolution. Still it is interesting. The Duchesse d'Angoulême is convinced that her brother is still alive. Father thought perhaps of introducing this woman to her presence, but on maturer thought thinks it would perhaps be unwise to open fresh wounds. His belief is that this child may be the son of the Duc de Bourbon, or some other Bourbon.

is to fall in love with her. She is the daughter of Madame Reubel, who was the great friend of Bonaparte when she was a girl. There is a thirty years' difference in their ages, as M. is now born when her mother was fifty-two years old. I have something to look forward to as I

FEBRUARY 5

All the Corps Diplomatique have called upon me to express their regret at our departure. I really feel all sincere. Father with his great simplicity and his sincerity, has won all hearts. I do not think I have an evil thought.

Mamma and Frances had a most delightful interview with the Duchesse d'Angoulême yesterday. She received them in her boudoir absolutely alone. She expressed her regret that she was leaving and said many flattering things. When retired she drew Frances to her and kissed her cheeks. Poor woman, she has always loved me more of her own.

FEBRUARY 7

I am going to make an ass of myself and have been drawn into going with some ladies in a car. I go to-morrow to Compiègne for one night only.

He goes alone. That Comtesse de Boigne is irrepressible. He had the audacity to ask mamma at the Spanish Embassy last night if her jewels were real. I cannot understand a woman of her birth and education being absolutely tactless. I think mamma must have given her a decided answer.

FEBRUARY 15

Full Carnival. I am beginning to enjoy it. We have arranged a car—also various suppers. A masked ball to-night at the opera. I am going to escort Mlle. de la Supper at the Maison Dorée.

FEBRUARY 17

Car a great success. Representing a "Horn of Plenty" we were all most carefully disguised, ses dames as well. A most delicious supper. Enfin—the last for me, so I will enjoy it though I have not got quite the zest and entrain of a couple of years since.

FEBRUARY 19

A dinner of farewell to-night at the Duc de Fernand, the Spanish Ambassador's. To-morrow the Baron de Vincent entertains us. I will have to manage to get off as early as there is a ball at the opera and we have a supper—this time des dames du monde.

FEBRUARY 22

To-night, Shrove Tuesday—our last supper, our last Frances had an excellent proposal for a man of good family, well off, &c., but he refused her twice. Father would not think of it for her.

MARCH 4

I think we all begin now to realize what it means to leave Paris. Mamma was trying to prepare us for our arrival in America. Her sister, who has very kindly placed her country house at New York at our disposal. Father will be going to Washington and to Geneva. But the ultimate end until that wretched day when Mamma actually burst into tears when she thought of the future. She has now acknowledged how hard for her to leave Paris. Of course this is said before father; we never distress ourselves.

MARCH 12

As soon as Lent is over we begin our Lenten exercises. I am making out the list so that we do not lose anybody by forgetting them. Mamma has ordered for her to order any more frocks for Frances as they will have no opportunity to buy any more.

APRIL 16

Easter being over we are beginning to pack. The packing has already commenced. Mamma has placed the Peacock at father's disposal.

APRIL 20

At 11.30 we were received privately by the King. Wonderful to relate, Madame du Cayla was not present. Both Monsieur and the Duc d'Angoulême were. The King seemed overcome, expressed deep regret at parting with father. Mamma and Frances were then admitted and took a formal farewell of him. Both Monsieur and the Duc d'Angoulême accompanied father and Mamma to the door of the ante-chamber and expressed a wish that they would return to Paris. The Duc d'Aumont then escorted us to the apartments of the Duchesse d'Angoulême. Half-way he handed us over to the care of the Duchesse de Serrent and the Vicomte de Montmorency. Mamma and Frances were received first—after they retired, father and myself were introduced. The Duchesse was most unbending and expressed regret, but the hope of seeing father again. She handed him a sealed packet, begging him to take great care of it. We then retired and to our amazement found a Royal carriage had been ordered to take us home; a second one followed with a gentleman and a lady of the Court. This was a very great compliment—as it was only an informal leave-taking. To-morrow we go to the Palace Royale to take leave. To-night I am going to the opera with a heavy heart, there to take a loving farewell of the ladies who have shown me much kindness. I cannot afford to offer them a supper, I only wish I could.

APRIL 21, 1823

1823]

DIARY OF JAMES GALL

goulême handed to him. It contains of letters addressed to her from Amer who imagine they are the Dauphin (12 from others who state that the poor child their care. A note from her begging father the matter if he possibly can, as it is t her life if her brother is alive to be a
 Of course father will do all he can, but he on the matter and fears that wicked p to prey on her feelings with a view of m

APRIL 22

Count Pozzo di Borgo has been kind breakfasted with us to-day. He brought a pretty bracelet. Alexander Humboldt come to dinner to-morrow for a last fare la Place* sent his regrets, but he is confi with rheumatism. He sent mamma flowers.

All is quite settled and we sail for A Father is much vexed that he has waste on so futile a mission. He has in plain Monsieur de Chateaubriand that Fran her policy if she wishes to retain the friend

MAY 10

We leave on the 14th. I regret partin kind friends the de Broglies in par made nearly all my adieu. One and a nature that nothing upsets, is quite serene and happy now. Madame Bonaparte has really shown deep feeling at parting with us. I think she is very grateful but she does not allow herself to show too much of her true nature.

LE HAVRE, ON BOARD "THE PEACOCK"

I am glad that it is over and that the great wrench is made. I am writing in my cabin. We sail early to-morrow morning. Mamma has brought her maid, who will do for Frances and herself. Father has his man. Lucien begged so hard to come with me that father consented. He is a very good lad, and I feel he is a sort of link between me and the last seven years of my happy life. I shut my eyes sometimes hoping when I opened them to find I am still in the Rue de l'Université, and that it has all been a horrible dream. The very smell of the ship makes me feel ill. The cackling of the chickens and the squealing of the pigs adds to the horrors. I know I will have to undergo. Lucien is now pea-green. The weather very fine. Captain Rogers says we will probably have fair winds and that we will make a quick passage—I hope so. Frances has just come to me in despair, her two canaries have been forgotten. We have sent a man on shore to see if they can be found. Everything is in such terrible confusion. A couple of the King's couriers have just arrived with letters from his Majesty, Monsieur and the Duc d'Angoulême—a more than gracious act. Canaries found, Frances delighted.

PART V

THE SPECIAL MISSION TO ENGLAND

JULY 1823—OCTOBER 1827

JULY 4: NEW YORK

A horrible day here; the noise of the July 4 celebration is intolerable. I have to rub my eyes to see if I am not dreaming; that it is true I am not in the Rue de l'Université. I regret it. Father is going alone to see the President in Western Virginia—also to Washington. I take Mother and Frances to Baltimore to-morrow. We are staying right in the country at a nice old house which belongs to the Montgomery family. But the difference is a bad thing; only about three private coaches in New York, no means of getting about. The streets are filthy and the heat horrible. I have been out all night for a long walk. No roads—no paths—no one realized the absolutely unfinished state of the country and cities until I returned. The horrible chewing of tobacco and the spitting; all too awful. We have had a very kind and hospitable reception, but all is so crude.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

call each other by their christian names. If I am at a post, no matter how humble, abroad, I am always at it with joy.

JULY 12: BALTIMORE

The heat is something I did not ever realize. A few days to some place by the sea. Frances has lost her colour. Albert has written me the most interesting letter. It seems he compromised himself with his daughter. They threatened him with exposure if he was weak enough to marry her on May 23. They were at sea. He is afraid to tell father and mother not to do so. The girl is living with her father and not know what to do. Troubles do not count. It seems this girl is without education.

SEPTEMBER 10

Back again in Baltimore and most thankful. A place on the Eastern shore of Maryland called a wooden shanty to live in, food not so bad but to eat like pigs. When we arrived and saw it was going to be like we commenced to laugh and not stop ourselves. The poor people thought we be lunatics. Father has gone to his beloved Virginia alone. Albert is there. He is going to us how the beautiful new residence is planned. They tell me Baltimore is very cheerful in the summer does not look much like it now. Mr. Patterson Bonaparte's father, has kindly invited us and fortunately the weather is much cooler. General and his wife have just called. They are

1823] DIARY OF JAMES GA

SEPTEMBER 24

I went this afternoon to Monsieur P is the oldest house in Baltimore. M gates that he had sent from France, a about the interior that I have never s I was received by Madame Reubel, some. She has a daughter and two s Frederic, is the handsomest young ma
He must be about seventeen. Mlle Pas
I am without doubt in love with he lost most of his money. Madame to sup with them to-morrow evening
She wishes to present me to her fath Madame Pascault never appears.

SEPTEMBER 26

I am quite off my head. Monsieur P
Marquis de Poléon, is a gentleman
No wonder his daughter is so well me with the most wonderful courtesy—gold snuff-box and offered it to me.
simple but served on beautiful silver the air of the greatest refinement self back in France again. I will s morrow and beg him to approach M with a view of my paying my address

SEPTEMBER 27

I have written to father, who is in N him that I wish, if she consents, to m my wife. Frances had a letter from fore. He had no idea of Grecian architecture but style of his own which is Hiberno-teutonic. The outside like a French barracks with port-hole windows, the inside ornamentations like those of a Dutch tavern, and the French marble chimney-pieces, mirrors and tapestries which he sent out are rather out of place. The workmen are still there and live and board in what the old man calls "The Château." The approach to the house is hidden by a log-cabin which is occupied by Monsieur and Madame, Mlle and the petits Bouffé family. Albert has taken possession of the only parlour in the old brick house. This young gentleman has four guns, a pointed three boats, two riding horses, and a pet colt smaller than a jackass. His wardrobe is distributed about the parlour, a billiard-table with Albert's old stockings for pocket money. So, my dear daughter," he adds, "we will pass the winter in Baltimore." This is a respite for us. I am delighted, for this will give me an opportunity for pressing my suit with Miss Pascault. I am anxiously awaiting father's answer to my letter. I know it would be wis-

SEPTEMBER 20

I have again called at Mr. Pascault's, and was received most kindly. I had some conversation with Mademoiselle Josephine; she is so absolutely gentle and sweet, I am certain I am not good enough for her. We dine at the Pattersons' again to-morrow. Madame Bonaparte has written to her father to be most civil to us. Mademoiselle Dubel and Mlle Pascault are to be of the guests.

so we are now well off. Mr. Pascault has an only daughter, who is now married to a Mr. O'Donnell, the son of a rich merchant. She was married when she was fifteen, and before she was sixteen. She is very beautiful, like a blown rose, but seems to have but little brains.

NOVEMBER 2

My suit is progressing. Josephine likes France. She plays delightfully both the piano and the spinet. I talk all sorts of nonsense which she likes. It has cheered her up as her youth has been very cheerful.

DECEMBER 6

All is settled. Mlle Pascault has consented to marry me, and we are to be married early in the New Year. My friends and Frances are delighted with her. She is very innocent. Mamma says she is like a child. She is beautiful, there is no doubt about that. Reubel rather astonished me by appearing in a bright red wig. It seems she has more colour to go with her frocks. A Bonaparte wig is not certainly adopted by the ladies of the aristocracy as I never saw such a thing in Paris. My father is horrible, has not a penny in the world, and is idle nearly all day, and lives on Monsieur Pascault. Does not attempt to do any work. His daughter is very handsome. A brother of Monsieur Pascault lives in a lodge at the gate but nobody ever sees him.

Josephine Marie Henriette Gallatin
née Pascault

DECEMBER 31

To-night we all sup with Monsieur Pascault to see the New Year in. It is father's first visit to the house. I am anxious to see how he treats Reubel.

JANUARY 2, 1824

The entertainment at Monsieur Pascault's was of the greatest elegance. Father was much pleased and noticed his astonishment at the fine plate, also the quantities of family portraits, &c. &c. I fear there is going to be delay with regard to our marriage. Josephine is a Catholic, and that is one thing father is adamant about. He will not allow (if we have any children) that they should be brought up in that religion.

JANUARY 5

Father was forced by his party, but much against his will, to accept the candidature for the Vice-Presidency. Mr. Crawford's stroke of paralysis required another candidate. All this is most annoying. Father does not wish to enter into public life again. When he left America seven years ago, I believe he vowed never to return. He has given the best part of his life and all his energies to his adopted country; no one knows better than himself that he is disliked, but that they still want to pick his brains and make use of him. He goes to Washington to-night.

FEBRUARY 18

I had hoped to be married this month, but still this qu will be married in the Protestant Church that a wife's first duty was to obey her husband.

MAY 5

We are back from our honeymoon and to join poor mamma at New Geneva, Washington. The Archbishop has called Monsieur Pascault.

MAY 10

The French Minister intimated to us that an important package to deliver into one of our accredited servants. As Lucien was returning to Washington, father sent him for it. I imagined when I found it was addressed to me. It was from the Duc and Duchesse d'Angoulême—a most magnificent vase with their arms on one side—a work of art. It was more than a surprise considering the difficulties we had been through, on account of the King's death. It has given me a thought. Josephine is delighted. Monsieur Pascault was greatly overcome. I must consult father in what form to accept it. We go in a few days to try the new house at New Geneva. It is all ready for our reception. In all probability we will pass the summer there. It is getting late here.

JUNE 8

We have been here for some time. The

DIARY OF JAMES GALLAT

proaching a dangerous spot he blows a horn. of my Paris intimes could see us—how a would be. Mamma attends to all our person We have many too many servants. France it “Castle Solitude.” Our greatest friend mosquitoes, who certainly keep us company reads all day as he is compiling some work hot for him to go to Washington at present. ford is no better.

SEPTEMBER 20

Josephine and myself return to Baltimore. Monsieur Pascault is very ailing and they are worried about him. Our home is empty, so I think I will not suffer too much from the heat. There is a rumour about a mission to France. I dare not go. It. When we leave, Frances says she will talk to him. It is awful for her. I am certain mamma will stay the winter here. Father will have to be in France on account of the elections.

OCTOBER 15

Greatly to the relief of us all, greatly to the relief of father himself, he has been able to withdraw from his candidature of Vice-President. It really is more than a hope of his party that should I have been elected President his health would have obliged him to withdraw, and father would have been head of the State. Of course his birth

1824]

DIARY OF JAMES GALL

Merely a square wooden house with a piazza. The interior most ordinary. It seems Carroll, who called himself Carroll of Carroll, the natural child of somebody. This I feel the habit of the Americans of the South of vain boasting. They of course have land and slaves; but miserable houses, and live in untidy manner. To my astonishment I find no schools in the Southern States and that of the better class have to be sent to the North to be educated. Father has decided to remain in Baltimore. Frances and Albert for the winter at New York. Of course I am obliged to remain in Baltimore.

DECEMBER 1824

My father-in-law is very ill and we are at the point of departure. Reubel found the air did not agree with him. He has betaken himself to New York, much to my regret. Of all. Madame Reubel is a delightful woman. She has suffered much. To be here in Baltimore, dependent on her friends, must be most disagreeable. Having lived at Court all her life, and at the Court of Westphalia, where she was waiting on the Queen. She often describes the splendours of the Palace at Cassel, which was given by the Landgrave of Hesse in imitation of Versailles. His son has it now and I believe the wife and fortune intact. When she was there and reigned, she says nothing could equal the

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

[18

says it will be his last year, and he wants to have the all around him. I am sorry I will be away from m father and mother, but my duty is by my wife. W expect our child in the New Year.

FEBRUARY 7, 1825

My dear wife was safely delivered of a fine boy this morn ing. We are going to call him Albert.

APRIL 15

Monsieur de Lafayette has arrived and has been receive with the greatest enthusiasm. His progress is a triumph ne. His cause is the emancipation of the Spani colonies and of Greece. Both of which are dear to th hearts of Liberals of all nations. When in Paris fath received the thanks of the Greek Governor for his effort in their behalf. Now that I am on the subject it seem to unfair that father was never allowed to accept a order of any kind or to retain any of the superb presen t that were given to him—all of which are now in Wash ington. All that he did keep was a superb set of glas some eight hundred pieces, that the Emperor Alexand gave him as a purely personal gift.

MAY 15

father has just written to me that I must be presen at Uniontown to help him receive Lafayette, who going to stay a couple of nights with him at Friendsh will. So I am off to-morrow. Josephine is quite we and so happy with her baby. I do not mind leaving he 1825]

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

ever seen in this country. People came away and camped out, bringing their tent is the nation's guest so was surrounded by a bodyguard. He spoke just after father duced him. Father spoke after him and he must have been inspired. His French a to leave him as he became excited. The the critical position of the Greeks. He nspired his audience, as I have never heard burst of genuine enthusiasm and cheering quite half an hour. Monsieur de Lafayette him publicly. We returned to Friends quite a thousand sat down to supper in rela had arranged everything wonderfully, rows tables in the garden. Hundreds of nigge in white to serve. Yesterday we passed in quiet, but there were callers all day for Lafayette. We had a quiet dinner which Lafayette said reminded him of the Rue de I do not think he was the only one who of it. He left this morning as he has a p to make and a very short time to make it i to-morrow to bring Josephine and my son summer.

JUNE 20: FRIENDSHIP HILL

We are all very happy here. The country is mamma certainly has the art of making comfortable. Josephine is delicate but I who has not fallen into some error which has cast suspicion on their motives. This Mr. Adams frankly acknowledges in his letter to me. When I read the paragraph I could see father's evident gratification at the opinion held of him by a political opponent—and that opponent the actual President of the United States. We drifted into reminiscences of Paris. Father's heart was there and in Geneva, but only stern duty keeps him here.

AUGUST

Father at last acknowledges that he made a mistake in building this house, and that we will never inhabit it after this summer. He has commissioned me to find a house in Baltimore for the winter as it is quite near enough to Washington for him in case he is obliged to be here. I was much gratified at receiving a beautiful silver bowl from some of my friends in Paris for my son. Albertine de Staël sent the most beautiful baby clothes. The first clothes my boy wore were those of Napoleon. The Queen of Westphalia gave them to Madame Reubien when her boy was born, and she gave them to Josephine. He still wears the little dressing-gown that was made by Madame Mère.

MAY 1826

We cannot realize what has happened. We are actually going to England. Mr. Rufus King's (our Minister in London) health has broken down. Most important

1826]

DIARY OF JAMES GALL

be placed in the hands of a very strong man to settle the whole of the commercial questions to be decided. The most important are the North-East and Western Boundary questions. Also the Convention which father negotiated in 1818 and again in 1818 to last ten years.

MAY 25

I am torn both ways. I know I could be of use to father. It is impossible to take passage across the ocean, as the discomforts where food is concerned, are so great. My friends are quite willing for me to go, in fact urged me to go. I will leave the matter entirely in father's hands.

JUNE 7

It is finally decided I am to accompany father for six months should I be wanted at home. For reasons this is thought to be for the best. As arranged we sail on July 1. I am doing my best to provide for more comfort for the voyage. I know how father has stood so many of the crossings of the Atlantic. The horrible storms. The misery of a gale when we can barely hold on. And the absolute horrors of a fog. We are to take a southerly course this time. Both father and mother are very much annoyed. At the last moment a proposition was made to father asking him to take me to England. It seems she is to marry have seen to the carriages and horses, all jobbed but very fine.

AUGUST 20

The King received us last week and was most gracious but what a change since I last saw him. He is far more red in the face and unwieldy.

SEPTEMBER

As nearly the entire Cabinet had left London, including Mr. Canning, father thought it a good opportunity to pay a visit to Paris. He particularly wished to consult Cavour on several very important matters. He finds that Bonapartism is nearly extinct. He found Monsieur de Lafayette in a far more peaceful frame of mind than when he paid his visit to America. He spoke to him in the most forcible language of his love for pretty plotting. He seems now to realize that such things are futile. His one wish now is to see the Duke of Orléans on the throne as a constitutional Monarch. He fears this is in the dim future. Lafayette is strongly in favour of the Duke's disputing the legitimacy of the Duc de Bordeaux. We had an interview with Monsieur de Vilèle, who seems much annoyed with the President's message, particularly with regard to Hayti. I do not think father gave him much satisfaction. A funny incident I must record. When we crossed to Boulogne mamma had to dress on board for reception at that port, which was being given to Monsieur de Lafayette. On our arrival it was low tide and as 1826]

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

up to her waist in water. She was in red huge turban covered with white feathers laughed the more enraged she became, rescued and carried, dripping, ashore. She at once to an inn and dried. She will nee
I find Paris delightful, but few of our fri are at their châteaux or by the sea. I vi haunts and have registered a vow that th in a position to do so I will return here t

OCTOBER: LONDON

We have now returned here and are ac and plenty of it.*

ALBERT GALLATIN to J. Q. A.

LONDON

DEAR SIR,

I had intended next spring, before America, to have an excursion to Paris some of my friends. Mr. Canning's a dispersion of the other members of the left me literally without anything to braced what was the most favourable making that journey, from which I hav
My letter of yesterday to the Secretary o the substance of the information I was there; and I will now add some partic they involve the names of individuals, I remain on record in the Department of real intention and meaning; that the British Government had offered to compromise the matter by payment of a sum of money which fell short of our expectation; but that we were nevertheless inclined to accept it principally on account of the reluctance we felt to trouble the Emperor by an appeal, asking from him further explanation of his decision. Pozzo immediately expressed his wish that we might compromise or otherwise adjust the matter without making such an appeal which, particularly at this time, would be, as he thought, extremely inconvenient to the Emperor; and speaking of the Maine Boundary question, with which and its possible consequences he appeared well acquainted, he appeared also desirous, though he did not express himself as positively as on that of slaves, that Russia should not be selected as the umpire. I only observed that if there was any inconvenience in being obliged to make decisions which might not please both parties, that inconvenience was less to Russia than to any other power, and that a compensation for it was found in the additional degree of consideration accruing to the Monarch in whom such confidence was placed. All this, however, corroborates what I have stated in my official letter respecting an approximation between Russia and Great Britain, and the disposition of the Emperor to interfere less than his predecessor in affairs in which he has immediate interest.

The most remarkable change discoverable to France is the extinction of Bonapartism, both as relates of the hopelessness of any attempt to pr at present; and he confines his hopes to tation that, after the death of the pr of the Dauphin, the Duc d'Orléans v legitimacy of the Duke of Bordeaux constitutional King. This is such a doub contingency as is not likely to involve I difficulties. Mr. de Villèle complained expressions in the President's message Hayti to have placed herself in a state France, as calculated to increase the amongst the people of the island at the la

He said that he was aware of the obje different nature which we had to a recogni pendence of Hayti, but did not see the nec the reason alluded to. As I did not w think it at all proper to enter into any o subject, I answered, as if in jest, "Qu'v à une colonie comme le prix de son inc contraire aux grands principes." I for the circumstance to Mr. Brown, and do n the thing had already been complained o its being repeated to me—and they v first words Mr. de Villèle addressed to it must have made a deep impression Government. This reminds me that I communication from a respectable quar
a few days before the publication of the of July last, one of the King's Ministers to a confidential friend of the general ton

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [1826

t your own communications, I am satisfied that those o the British Ministers can have given no offence what-ver, and that what they allude to and which has offended them is your instructions to Mr. Rush, printed by order of the Senate, and which have been transmitted both to Mr. Canning and to Mr. Huskisson; a circumstance by the by, not very favourable to negotiations still pending. That they have no right to complain of what you wrote to our own Minister is obvious; still, I think the fact to be so.

I forgot to mention in my letter of yesterday to the Secretary of State that there is some alarm amongst the legitimates about a plan of Metternich to change the line of succession in Austria, or a plea of the presumed incapacity of the heir presumptive; and that the King of the Netherlands has at last, by his unabated and exclusive attention to business and by his perfect probity and sincerity, so far conquered the prejudices of the Belgians as to have become highly respected and almos popular amongst them.

I have the honour, &c.,

ALBERT GALLATIN

NOVEMBER 14

Yesterday the Convention of 1818 was renewed and signed; a meeting again to-morrow. Mr. King left yesterday. Mr. Lawrence is expected to-day.

DECEMBER

Father is anxious that the Emperor of Russia should act as arbiter on the North-Eastern Boundary question been most gracious. She has bidden us in January. They say it is a most magnificent and that wonderful state is kept up. Devonshire, whom we knew in 1818, has been so. He is not married and never will. He is the son of the Duke ——: that at nearly the same time the Duchess had a daughter, the Duke's son—as they were most anxious for an heir, but were changed. For a long time the decision was up, but somebody in the end confessed that he was then in possession of the title; as he was so beloved it was agreed that he should retain it, but that he was never to marry. The Barings were most cordial in their reception of us. We dine with them on Christmas Day. I feel very low in my mind and feel that I should not have left my dear wife and child. I am in the ways. It seems to take such an unconscionable time to receive any news from home. The King is everywhere with Lady Conyngham. She is getting all the money and property that she can for her children, before the King dies. She was at Princess Lieven's all the Crown Sapphires that the King has given them to her.

DECEMBER 15

There is not much entertaining. The King is in the Council. I met Mr. Greville* the other night. He is in the Council. I was amused to see him make different things I told him. Rather a most gracious to father, who likes him very much but does not think him a very strong man. Lady Wellesley (Mrs. Robert Patterson*) has been in London. We dined with her. Of course now she is a very great lady, and does not forget it. She has asked me to come to Dublin after Christmas. She says I will be much amused by Dublin society and the Viceregal Court. I will certainly go if there is not too much work here. There is the horrible Irish Channel to be considered and the very long journey. Mamma arrives to-morrow. We have to entertain some Americans, there are a great many in London at present. Father has declined to present me at Court. He is not resident Minister only a special ambassador.

Ride every day as I fear I am getting fat; Mrs. Baring has just told mamma that she has invited every available member of the Baring family to her Christmas dinner. We are to be the only outsiders.

DECEMBER 20

Looked in at White's. All intent on gambling. What was there a sum of £8000 changed hands. Had some supper; a thick fog, had to have a link man to show me the way home.

DECEMBER 21

Dined at a large Diplomatic dinner at Prince Jules de Polignac's at the French Embassy; all men—we saw about thirty-six. I was delighted to meet Montmorency

1826]

DIARY OF JAMES GALLA

morency and I went for a short time to W supper late. London unutterably dull very happy as she has a perfect riot of chu
It will be gayer after Christmas, but on Corps Diplomatique. We are booked for I was delighted with a long letter from All are well and seem very happy. Fa to have some sort of reception for the A New Year. We really make quite a s using all our old French State liveries—fectly fresh.

DECEMBER 26

We had a delightful Christmas with the are hospitality itself. There are Barings of colours, all sizes—tall ones, short ones, ones, but all are so nice and cheerful; the a united family. We played all sorts o and became children again. I could not ke from home. Mr. Baring would drink my health, this nearly broke me up.

We have a big reception of Americans on

DECEMBER 29

Driving home late last night near the top we heard cries for help. I jumped down hackney-coach which had been stopped
Two lonely females were in it. They ha

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATI

DECEMBER 30

Rumours of a change in the Cabinet, but nothing confirmed.
The King comes to Buckingham House in the afternoon.
There is a report that Lord Liverpool is ill, but not confirmed. . . .

JANUARY 3, 1827

The "rout" for all of our compatriots last night was as successful as any "rout" can be; to be seen sitting in a coach before arriving at the destination; then to crawl up about three or four times every half-hour; to be stifled and toes trodden upon; to make a bow to your hosts; to edge one's way through the crowd; to drink hot champagne and see one's face down one's back. Then to start one's jacket up again. If this spells pleasure, then a "rout" is a rout. We indeed take our pleasures oddly.

"Crockford's," the magnificent new gambling establishment in James's Street, was opened yesterday. Pozzo, the Prince Esterhazy, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Devonshire, &c. &c., all belong to it. Pozzo took me up to the establishment. It was very fine. Supper lavish. It is to be the principal gambling resort of the aristocracy.

JANUARY 6

The Duke of York died yesterday quietly in his arm-chair. This of course puts the Court in mourning. They say he never recovered from the effects of the ashes! I will have to go to the funeral as fate does not permit him to attend such ceremonies.

JANUARY 20

We have had some difficulty with our coachmen who committed an assault outside the Embassy for refuge when they were about to arrest him in the street. Of course no officers of the law can enter a private residence. Father was informed of the matter. He inquired into the facts of the case and absolutely refused to turn the man up. It has caused a good deal of commotion and the matter is not yet closed.

Our visit to Trentham was a great success. The palace indeed, and such magnificence I have never seen outside a royal residence, either here, in England or in Russia. Lady Stafford received us in a very dignified and gracious manner. She has a great admiration for her father, I believe, because Madame de Staël was very fond of him, and she had a cult for her. The garden was quite beautiful, looking out on a lake and a bay of water. In summer it must be perfectly lovely. Then it stands empty as all the family come to London. The reception rooms, state rooms, were in a beggar description, full of superb works of art. We were sixty guests, a large portion of the Court, including the Duke and Mr. Canning. Great ceremony, but the rest of the day we were allowed to do as we chose. Horses to ride, coaches of our disposal. Dancing and music in the evening.

this morning with Frances, the inevitable footman following us. Lord Cassillis called to-day with his charming wife; she was a daughter of Mr. and Lady Mary Watts. Lady Mary was brought up in America as she and her sister, Lady Cathrine Duer, were the daughters of Lord Stirling. Mamma had known them well.

FEBRUARY

There is a Cabinet crisis which has kept everything at a standstill—very annoying. We dined with the Duke of Devonshire yesterday, at his house in Piccadilly. He is a most gracious host. Snappy Charles Greville always asking questions and taking notes, was there. A book called "Vivian Grey," published by Colburn and immensely puffed, appeared last year. There were many surmises as to who the author was. Great names were mentioned and there was much speculation on the matter. It now turns out to be by a quite unknown youth called Disraeli, a Jew. Greville had the audacity to say that he knew who the author was from the first. Father thought well of the book. Lady Conyngham appears in the depth of mourning for the Duke of York. This causes much amusement. I do not think we will remain here much longer. I am most anxious to return home.

Father is really despondent, everything goes at a snail's pace. Mr. Adams after promising him an absolutely free hand is evidently irritated by Mr. Clay's continual interference and also influenced by him. Father looks upon Mr. Clay as simply an obstinate firebrand who is seem to be slowly creeping toward the end. Father the only thing and we want a sack full of it. Suppose (Rockford's last night. Valleyland was opposite to it. I looked more like an ape than ever. The absolute of the gambling-room is extraordinary. I cannot visualize the passion for gambling. I suppose it is a disease everything else. Father has little dinner of loved crones, Humboldt, Pozzo di Borgo, Baring, & really enjoy their delightful conversation. The attempt for the world amuses me.

weather, which has been dreadful, is a little better. I am contenting to speak of. I am particularly dull. I have plenty of work to do. Mr. Lawrence very capable and father is much pleased with him.

r. (Cunning is now Prime Minister. It seems to him a him into a good temper and he is far more grateful though his temper at times is very trying. Father much to his disgust, has been summoned by the King Brighton—I go with him.

only stopped one night at Brighton. Rooms had been prepared for us at a house close to the Pavilion, which the King keeps for his guests. We were near his Majesty, who was lying on a divan—he could hold himself up. Lady Conyngham was first, but at a nod from the King, retired, as if she had something of a temper. They talked on several political subjects, and for a wonderful lucidity. He said suddenly, "Canning is an old woman." We were bid to sup with the King. I could see that father could hardly dissemble. The conversation was boisterous and indecorous after supper, and on a plea of being very fatigued begged leave to retire. He and I went for a walk on the sea. The only remark he made was, "And the King." We left in the morning without seeing his Majesty.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIE

APRIL 24

Mr. Canning's temper has become most unmanageable. At dinner last night father was sitting next to Baron Humboldt; after dinner, Mr. Canning came up to father and said, "The opinion universally entertained in England is that the Government is a despotism—it is not, it is a monarchy." Both father and Baron Humboldt were much surprised at this extraordinary outburst. They could not explain it, but of the gentlemen sitting near, too, heard it and seemed much astonished. Later on the day, Mr. Wellington had a chair brought and placed near father and Humboldt. He made himself most agreeable, but seemed worried about something. He the opinion universally entertained abroad generally indeed in England, that this is an aristocracy, is not true. It is," said he "a monarchy. The Whigs had found it when they tried to oppose the King's choosing his Prime Minister. The Tories repeated the same experiment, and with no greater success. He appears certainly very confident, and intended opposition in Parliament as if he had no fear of it. As all the leading newspapers are in opposition to me, I enclose the only pamphlet of note that has appeared on the other side.

An infusion of Whiggism in the Ministry, or the accession of such a man as the Marquis of Lansdowne might perhaps, after a while, have produced a considerable change in the policy of the Administration towards the United States. For the present, no such change is expected. I do not believe that there is a serious breach between us in which the Ministers will not be guided by the public opinion of the country in opposition to the ground against us. Our dependence for friendship rests solely on the superior sense of the British Government. Unfortunately Mr. Huskisson* is less favorable towards the United States, principally on the subject of navigation, than towards any other country. He is disposed to meet in other respects a formidable opposition, he may be disposed to regain some of the ground with the shipping interest to pursuing w session of Parliament, I will ascertain in the course of next week whether it is intended that our negotiations should be resumed. Mr. Canning, on the 23rd, again expressed great regret that they should have been long interrupted, and intimated his intention of having within a few days, a special conversation with me.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN [18

I have the honour, and &c.,

ALBERT GALLATIN

MAY

People are returning to London, and it promises to be a very gay season. Already we have several invitations, but we are here for too short a time to make really any friends. The Court returns to Buckingham House to-morrow, but there will not be any Court entertainment which is a relief. London is looking her best now. The Park is gay with flowers. I ride out to Kew and Richmond in the early morning—before anybody is stirring. Lady Kensington has been most kind to mamma and Frances. Miss Edwards and the latter are inseparable. They go sometimes to Holland House, which is very beautiful.

JUNE

Took Frances to Kew Gardens this afternoon. Flowers and plants beautiful. Dinner at the French Embassy. Glad to see some of my old Paris friends. Mr. Canning more and more odd in his manner. Lord Goderic had a long interview with father this morning.

JUNE 4

at the Duke of Wellington's last night display of gold plate. A rout at 10. It took me exactly one hour to get from bottom of the stairs. I was wedged between Greville and an immensely fat Dowager moved step by step together—and this Dinner at Devonshire House to-night at Buckingham House, but no entertaining.

JUNE 15

Frances has just come in from a walk and made us guess whom she met—fat Mr. brought from America with us. The wheeled chair; Lady Conyngham was with him. The weather intolerably hot. Home. All are well. Plenty of work.

JULY

Work, work, work, nothing but work, preparing drafts of treaty, only to be once made. Weather intolerably hot when all is signed and sealed and we have breathing time. Mamma and Frances as they are dining out every night, and following. Mrs. Baring is most assiduous and insists on chaperoning Frances is tired.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATIN

has been left to chance, every detail has been assuring peace for years to come.

ALBERT GALLATIN to HENRY CLAY

LONDON, Au

SIR,

It is now understood that the new Administration of this country is to be but a continuation of that of the late Administration, to act on the same principles, and no new measures to be made but those that are strictly necessary.

Lord Goderich is First Lord of the Treasury; Lord Harrowby, President of the Council, retires; Lord Lansdowne, Lord Dudley, and the other Ministers, with the exception perhaps of Mr. Huskisson, resign their respective offices. The Duke of Wellington resumes his place of Commander-in-Chief, but does not take seat in the Cabinet, which he could not with propriety have accepted, since his fellow-seceders were Mr. Peel, and this is the greatest loss to the Administration, cannot at this time come in, having so recently committed himself by his solemn declaration that he would not resign for resigning was that he could not make any Administration at the head of which was a Catholic emancipation.

The places to be filled are: (1) the President of the Council; and I have not heard who is intended for the Duke of Portland; (2) Colonial Department, vacated by Lord Goderich's promotion; (3) Chancellor and, above all, as requiring less political tact than that case. Mr. Herries, the principal of the Treasury, and a capable man, but of little influence, will probably be the Chancellor. Palmerston is also spoken of, and the Vice-President, will naturally become the President of the Board of Trade.

The great difficulty is who shall succeed as leader of the House of Commons. Mr. Brougham would have more of their confidence than Mr. Canning (this is out of the question); and all that can be done is to agree on almost every subject but the repeal of the emancipation with the members of the House. Mr. Brougham will not become the leader of an opposition; and him there hardly can be one in the House. The return of the Duke of Wellington to the Army would go far to paralyse the influence of the Lords, whilst it would add to the influence of the Administration abroad. Mr. Brougham is the first man in the House of Commons; and Mr. Canning in force and logic, at least in the House. Mr. Canning's powers, far more consistent in his private life, but these are much too rank for the House of Commons for the nation. Not even a moderate opposition for the present, and Mr. Brougham is better calculated to drive than to lead. Mr. Canning is, therefore, the only man; and he is on and intended as the Ministerial leader.

This place, for it is one united to ment and solid, if not showy, talents. Power will be more divided than under Mr. Canning. I think that the influence of Marquis Lansdowne would be greater if he could be transferred to the Foreign Office. As matters now stand, the great political questions will be decided by the Cabinet. Mr. Huskisson will have more weight in those affecting the finances of the country; he will direct almost exclusively (with the exception of the commercial question) the commercial regulations, whether interior or in their connexion with foreign relations.

There will, therefore, be no change in the policy of Great Britain towards us. The question of Colonial intercourse was decided almost entirely by Mr. Huskisson's influence. He adheres to that decision, and immediately before leaving the country again committed himself to that respect by positive assurance to merchants interested in the subject. All the difficulties in renewing the commercial convention, and the determination not to renew it unless it might be rescinded at will, also originated with him. He has an undue and not very liberal jealousy of the increasing navigation of the United States. In other respects he cannot be said to be hostile to them, and he would wish that causes of actual rupture might be removed. I have reason to believe that he would be in favour of a satisfactory arrangement on the subject of impressment.

His views in regard of the country west of the Rocky Mountains are, on the whole, temperate, and the difficulties on the subject of the North-East Boundary cannot

1842] DIARY OF JAMES GAILLARD

Portugal is at this moment the p embarrassment.

I have the honour to be respect

Your most obed

At

AUGUST 16

A treaty was signed to-day which co mercial Convention of 1815 indefin entirely satisfactorily settled and we America.

SEPTEMBER

London empty. We have to go to Brigh leave of his Majesty. We sail on left now for us to do is to settle our Mamma and Frances are paying some the country. Father is serenely con there will be peace for many years betw and the United States.

OCTOBER 9. LIVERPOOL.

We embark to-morrow morning. The
It is a bad season of the year but we mu Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Baring have here most kind of the latter. I leave but long to see my dear wife and child life in the New World.

DIARY OF JAMES GALLATI

and I was landed at Annapolis. In one respect was a disappointment, and a serious one. I much wished to seek you out in your retreat, an old and highly valued acquaintance, and and hope I may add, friendship; to talk over the Old and New World, their follies and their present and bygone actors, all of whom understands so well as you do, and, what is nobody that has crossed my passage in life has to me to judge with the same candid impartial pleasure of meeting you is, I trust, only deferred if I live to accomplish my work here, or leave the country without an attempt to find and to draw a little wisdom from the best available it may be too late for my use in the work I have and very much at heart.

You will probably be surprised at my taking this task at my period of life, and when I am my own thoughts I am sometimes surprised myself at my rashness. People here stare when I tell them I listened to the debates in Congress on Mr. Madison in 1795, and seem to think that some antediluvian come amongst them out of his grave. The temptation I was tempted by my great anxiety in the the extreme peace between our countries. This circumstance induced my political friends to appoint me, and with much hesitation, solely upon my health and age, I yielded. In I am My reception has been everything I on reasonable terms. I expect a other, and my present character new to me that I know no other plain dealing. The most inexperienced me hollow at such work. I rely my dear sir, though I have nothing will believe me unfeignedly yours

APPENDIX I

Correspondence between Albert Gallatin and Baring; showing the state of feeling in England and America and the possibilities of the success of

ALBERT GALLATIN to MESSRS. BARING BROS.

GOTTENBURG, J.

GENTLEMEN,

The President of the United States has accepted on the part of the said States the mediation by the Emperor of Russia, Mr. Bayard and I have been appointed, jointly with Mr. Adams, with full powers to treat of peace with such plenipotentiaries as may be appointed on the part of Great Britain. I left the United States in the public ship Neptune. Lloyd Jones, on May 11, arrived here on the instant, and intend to proceed this evening on our way to St. Petersburg.

We are authorized to draw on you for the expenses and for the contingent expenses of the mission in order to assist us with the best mode of st paragraph of this letter, I should wish your Government to be informed. And we will be thankful for any intelligence connected with our mission which you may deem important and which you may feel at liberty to communicate. We sailed with a passport from Admiral Warren; and whatever may be the result of this mission we feel anxious to return speedily and safely to America. We will detain the Neptune at St. Petersburg for that purpose, and may want a passport from your Government for her return with ourselves and suite on board. It is presumable that this will be obtained without difficulty. And will thank you to make the inquiry and to cause, if necessary, such passport to be forwarded to us at St. Petersburg.

APPENDIX I

ALBERT GALLATIN

ALEXANDER BARING to ALBERT GALLATIN

LONDON, July 22, 1846

DEAR SIR,

The letter with which you honoured my house from Gottenburg has remained for a few days unanswered for the purpose of obtaining the information necessary to enable me to make a satisfactory reply.

For the money you may require you will please to direct drafts upon us or on Amsterdam in any manner you may think expedient. Messrs. Meyer and Bruxner, bankers at St. Petersburg, by whom this letter will be conveyed to you, have our directions to obey any orders you may give them on this subject, presuming that you will pre-on the dispositions of Government and of concerning it, upon which I have good reason to that you may perfectly rely.

APPENDIX I

I anticipated the most favourable result names which constituted the new commission confident that we should soon see an end of the war. I was quite sure you would not leave without the powers and the disposition to do you this essential service, and although the place for the negotiation, and the manner in which proposed to conduct it, considerably abated the of the public, I never entertained those doubts sincerity of America with which those circumstances inspired others.

The mediation of Russia was offered, not was fairly and frankly accepted. I do not America could with any consistency refuse the eyes of a European politician it was clear an interference could produce no practical benefit only question now seriously at issue between purely of a domestic nature in each country and no foreign Government can fairly judge it. of the relative rights and duties of Sovereign between two great countries, where, owing to recent separation, a distinction between the good of their seafaring population becomes almost can only exist between Great Britain and America. No other country can judge of the various positions delicacy and importance to which such a sta-neither understanding nor caring for an end, but merely to enable them to wrangle continuously about their own.

APPENDIX I

This is not the way for Great Britain and Prussia to settle their disputes; intelligent persons in both countries might devise mutual securities which perhaps neither country would offer to the aid of a third party. It is a sort of family quarrel, foreign interferences can only do harm at the present time, but more especially in the present, when attempts would be made to make a settlement in a manner which I am sure neither Government nor colleagues would sanction.

These, I have good reason to know, are the sentiments of Government here on the subject of negotiation and foreign mediation, and if you reaches you you will have been informed that the proposition has been refused, with expressions that we should treat separately and directly here, or, if you wish, to you, at Gottenburg.

I believe you may rely upon it that from this we shall not here depart, not only from the objections I have already stated to a mediation, but that your persevering in such a course is considered here as the touchstone of your loyalty, though I trust our Government does not share the prevailing opinion here that a secret connexion exists with France, yet your persevering in this insulated question before the Powers would favour those suspicions, and in the negotiation it is in reality for the purpose of coming to that result with more certainty. This city has, I understand, been proposed to you, and Gottenburg offered as an alternative in case you do not choose to trust yourselves so near to us.

APPENDIX I

My hopes of a favourable result would be much increased by your coming at once in contact with our Ministers. The advantages in all cases of treating the principle are obvious, but the peculiar character of the point in dispute gives them greater weight. You would find any Minister of this country very cautious in giving instructions to any plenipotentiary to treat on a subject of so much delicacy as the rights and duties of Sovereign and subject. Those instructions must remain recorded in his office, and may be called for by Parliament. Concessions might be made, securities and substitutes devised, and difficulties overcome in a direct negotiation which I should almost despair of if it were to be carried on at a distance; and I am quite sure that the mass of intelligence which your commission affords on the relative policy of Great Britain and America is more than a match for all our island can produce on the same subject, upon which the ignorance of many of our leading characters would probably surprise you. But you would naturally wish to ask the question whether, should you consent to come here to negotiate, there is a probable chance of a favourable result. Upon this I will give you my candid opinion, and I know that you, without deceiving you, state the sentiments countries can do each other is now pret we can tense and weaken each other wi result, and you cannot for a moment carry the resources now employed in against you into the more important contest.

APPENDIX I

With these feelings, why has the war The only serious point at issue may be the improvement of seamen—a ques itself serious and not imaginary, diffic any solution of them the disposition on sincere, the spirit of peace must and I will not disguise from you that this question of seamen up as cause of effort for conciliation was made in the in Council, the prevalent opinion here was a war of passion with the people of concessions would only show weakness them, and that therefore no alternative to fight it out as well as we could. Was well or ill founded need not now prevented at the time any deliberate question of seamen, which was consi pretext, to be followed by some other This opinion I believe to be, in as far concerned, on the change. The repres desirous of seeing a return of peace on a growing opinion that America has safety of our maritime power, supposed to be, and which undoubtedly is, involved in this question.

APPENDIX I

So much I can confidently say of the disposition existing here. But are the difficulties, supposing the disposition on both sides to be perfect, of themselves insurmountable? Are we doomed to the necessity of perpetual war? Upon this point I will give you with sincerity my opinion. I shall not trouble you with any extensive discussion of a subject with which you are so well acquainted. The difficulties are very considerable, but, although I can hardly say that I think they can be surmounted to the entire satisfaction of both parties, I do think that by sincere and friendly discussions some system may be devised of practical efficiency to answer the reasonable purposes of both countries. At all events, it is the duty of both to make some arrangement, because some arrangement or perpetual war are the only alternatives. It is easy on either side to dress the question out with popular attractions, but any indifferent person understanding it and considering it calmly must be sensible that on our side we could not admit your pretensions to their full extent without endangering the discipline and even the existence, of our navy, and, on the other hand, that on your part you cannot submit to the existing system as practised by us. There is, therefore, a necessity of some settlement. If you submitted at present the growing power and population of America would force a settlement on the two countries at no distant period perhaps after ruinous wars. Being frequent an American as an inevitable concomitant of war, and to provide for it accordingly. I do not discuss the abstract question of right and wrong, but of one of necessity, and with us I sincerely believe.

APPENDIX I

If therefore the disposition of your Government to adhere pertinaciously to the determination of the Act of Congress for a better security than the Act of Congress should think your coming here or negotiation useless for any good purpose. I know it must be so. I know that any Government of this country restrained from such an unlimited course of action by a known and certain danger, by the state of the world, and that the best friends to the rest of the world would not be bold enough to recommend such a course. On the other hand, if you are desirous of endeavoring for an explanation and concession, to consult the feelings of just apprehension of both countries, I can assure you that you will find a corresponding feeling here; and although I would not speak of difficulties to be overcome, I am inclined to consider the subject to anticipate a moderate degree of success from the joint efforts of the Government and those persons whom our Government has appointed to meet you.

I have thus, my dear sir, ventured to express what occurs to me on the interesting subject of your mission. I should not have risked my opinion, feeling certain that I was not misleading you, but proper to trust to them. I hope they will induce you not to return to America without a

APPENDIX I

If I can personally be of any service, I trust you will freely command me, and that I may be permitted to present my compliments to Mr. Bayard and Mr. Adair with whom I believe I have the advantage of a very slight acquaintance, which I should have the greater satisfaction in being afforded an opportunity of improving. I am, with great consideration and personal regards, dear sir, your very obedient servant,

ALEXANDER BARING

ALBERT GALLATIN to ALEXANDER BARING

St. Petersburg, August 27, 18

DEAR SIR,

The letter (of July 22) with which you have favoured me was received on the 17th inst. For this return you my sincere thanks, and duly appreciate the importance of the information you have obtained, and the motives which have actuated you. Although I cannot write as freely as a person whose communications do not come to his own Government, the hope that our correspondence may be of some public utility induces me to enter as far in the subject as is consistent with my situation. We have not received, as you suggested, the information that the mediation of Russia had been refused by Great Britain, with expressions of a desire to treat with us separately and directly at London or at Gottenburg. It is possible that Lord Walpole, who is said here to have gone to the Emperor's headquarters, may be the bearer of that communication. We have in the meanwhile to treat afterwards of commerce, if Government, and without reference to This was alluded to by the President of in his last message, and is now mention of his sincere desire not only to make pish the relations between the two countries on friendly footing.

APPENDIX I

It does not belong to me to direct which your Government may have to try the mediation of Russia; but we were aware when we left America, that any such coalition had an interest in the restoration of peace between the two countries, since the war interrupted relations with America, and diverted a large British force from the important operations of warfare. In the terms on which peace was made in the essential point at issue—a point, I repeat, could not in practice arise with Russia, had no immediate interest. In those relations therefore the essential requisites in a treaty were a sincere wish that peace might be made, and as to the subject of the dispute. On the subject with Russia we had only friendly and commercial but no political connexion. You had relations of the same nature with ours and on a more extensive scale. And you had at that time an intimate political connexion, necessary to your being united in a most important and formidable common enemy. You were not presuppose that if the mediation was a success there could be any hesitation on the subject on the part of Great Britain, unless she considered it at all events at this moment, either impracticable or undesirable. We did also believe that our acceptance of a mediator a Sovereign at war with France was clear evidence of our neither having nor wishing any political connexion with this last Power. We must remove those suspicions on the part of your Government to which you allude, and which, although erroneous and destitute of foundation, might continue to have an unfavourable effect on the negotiations and termination.

APPENDIX I

Such was the view of the subject under which the Government acted in the appointment of the preliminary mission; and you must at once perceive that a rejection of the mediation on the part of Great Britain had been anticipated, the result would have been a direct mission to that country for which the preliminary foundation, but merely a declaration that the United States accepted the mediation, and were ready to act upon it whenever it was accepted by Great Britain.

It will be a matter of regret if this frank proposal on the part of America, this effort to re-establish peace in an honourable manner and without suing for it, at the threshold, be defeated by the absolute refusal of the Government of the offered mediation. Without entering in a discussion of the objections they

APPENDIX I

America is concerned, is at all events not inadmissible, I still indulge the hope that you finding that a rejection of the mediation mission is concerned, a refusal to negotiate that confidence in the sincerity of our views to which we feel ourselves entitled, will in consideration of the subject, find it practical an acceptance of the mediation with the principles.

With respect to the main question, the an arrangement, you are sensible that I time and on this occasion enter into it would not have given up my political separated myself from my family unless an arrangement practicable and that I utility in effecting it, you are sufficient law to which you allude is a municipal may, however, be considered as a prima the general disposition of the American to advance towards a compromise. One could not be more explicit without in fact the negotiation itself. I will only state desirable it might be to define with precise permanent manner the respective rights countries on the subject of improvement, that this can be effected at this time, that can be induced to abandon its rights or that respect. All that, in my opinion, can have said will be used for its intended purpose of assisting in promoting the restoration of peace. I know how dear this object is to you, and that we both have an equal desire that not only peace but the most friendly relations and understanding should subsist between the two countries. I can assure you that such also is the sincere and earnest desire of my Government, and that nothing which can be done in that respect will be omitted on my part or on that of my colleagues. Whatever the result may be, I will preserve a just sense of your friendly conduct on this occasion, and remain with great consideration and sincere regard, dear sir, your very obedient servant,

APPENDIX I

ALBERT GALLATIN

ALEXANDER BARING to ALBERT GALLATIN

LONDON, October 12, 18

DEAR SIR,

The letter you favoured me with of August 2 reached me in course of post, and if I have delayed in reply it has not been, I can assure you, from any neglect of the important subject of its contents. I have been endeavouring to be useful in an object which I have very much at heart. At this season of the year those with whom I wished to confer are generally out of town, and correspondence becomes necessary. In communicating to you the result of my endeavours I am sorry to say that they have been less successful than I could hope or than I had at one time expected: at the same time, however,

APPENDIX I

I shall confine myself principally to the rest of the rather as little time is left me before the close of the post, and I wish that no time may be lost here resolved to abide by the principle of direct negotiation. I had hoped that an agreement might have been advanced and ascertained that the mediation might have been a mere matter of form, and in that case it might have been adopted for the purpose of keeping your powers alive, and although I could offer nothing to nothing like certainty as to this probability, I am still inclined to infer it from the expression of your letter and from what I have heard here. But it has been resolved here not to defer the first resolution of entering only into a direct negotiation, and it is thought that, upon the whole, time may be saved by this mode, even though it may oblige you to have recourse to America for an extension of your powers. The arguments used by you in favour of a Russian mediation are very ingenious, but no inference of insincerity is drawn from America's adoption of this mode, but there are circumstances connected with the nature of the question which makes it necessary when in any common political dissension it is the most rational and satisfactory course to adopt, and whatever may be the weight of argument on either side you may be assured that the determination will be irrevocable, and before this reaches you it must have been communicated to you in some authentic manner. At the same time a readiness for direct negotiation is declared, this must save entirely any fear reaches you, as the Baltic will probably be closed for navigation by the end of this month. The omission of Mr. Adams' name in the passport was quite accidental and must have been my fault. I have no recollection of the circumstance, but I probably concluded at the time that as he was the resident Minister at St. Petersburg he would not return. I trust, however, that he will not have hesitated to accompany you on account of the mission, which he may be assured will be of no consequence, and that the vessel, with any person belonging to the mission, will be suffered freely to pass our fleets.

APPENDIX I

On the subject of the probability of an agreement between the two Governments I am sensible that you must necessarily write with reserve; but as I am under no such restraint, I will state to you fairly what you may expect here, and I do it because this may influence our determination on other points, and because I always think that between States, as between individuals, where the intentions are honest, plain language is always preferable to artifice. We wish for peace. The pressure of the war upon our commerce and manufactures is, however, they have ample relief in other quarters; and indeed, the dependence of the two countries on each other was, as it usually is, overrated. But the war has no object; it is expensive; and we want to carry our efforts elsewhere. Our desire of peace, therefore, cannot be doubted, and you may quite rely upon it. With respect to the only question really at issue, we are disposed to concert with you the most efficient means of almost everything that is objectionable—point you will find us reasonable and lib-firm upon the question of not giving up examination and search, and indeed with-not only to see peace restored, but to given to America on this point wh-thought she had a right to. I cannot see under our present system of manning our

All the Acts of Congress or Acts of Parliabe framed would be ineffectual without sure that when you come to the details y-the same opinion; and it is for this reason from the cautious wording of your letter not be disinclined to an arrangement upon where every precaution would be taken think, effectually, to remove everything thin the present practice, and to subject it bility towards both Governments, under can be made consistent with a state of pea-trouble you with any detailed examination the general principles of our Government as I have stated, and if they are not rep-instructions I think you would soon com-of peace without the help or hindrance of

I have not yet had a good opportunity to send your letters for Mrs. Gallatin; the but a cartel is expected to sail in a few shall be taken care of. We have not had any for you. I beg you will believe me happy to be useful, and with great esteem
dear sir, your sincerely devoted servant,

APPENDIX II

LETTER FROM VOLTAIRE TO THE COMTE D

9 Fév

Voici la plus belle occasion, mon cher an votre ministère céleste. Il s'agit du meilleur je puisse recevoir de vos bontés.

Je vous conjure, mon cher et respec d'employer tout votre crédit auprès de Mon de Choiseul; auprès de ses amis, s'il le faut maîtresse, etc. etc. Et pourquoi ose-je voi tant d'appui, tant de zèle, tant de vivacité, e prompt succès? Pour le bien du service, me pour battre le Duc de Brunswick. M. Gall aux gardes Suisses, qui vous présentera ma réquête, est de la plus ancienne famille de se font tuer pour nous de père en fils depuis l

L'Oncle de celui-ci a été tué devant C frère a été à la malheureuse et abominabl Rosbach, à ce que je crois; journée où l suisses firent seuls leur devoir. Si ce n'est pa c'est ailleurs; le fait est qu'il a été tué; e blessé. Il sert depuis dix ans; il a été ai vent l'être. Il faut des aides-major qui

APPENDIX II

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Here, my dear angel, is the finest occasion for your administration. I am asking for the greatest service I can by your kindness.

My dear and honourable friend, I implore you to go with the Duc de Choiseul, with his friends, and if to the mistress, etc. Why do I ask for so much support and determination—above all for a speedy and successful good of the service, dear angel—to fight the Duc M. Gallatin, officer in the Swiss Guards, who will be a request to you, belongs to the oldest family in Germany; shed their blood for us from father to son since 1744. Quatre.

The uncle of this Gallatin was killed before Orléans, I believe, at the unhappy and accursed day of 10 October, when the Swiss regiments alone did their duty. If it was somewhere else. The fact remains that he was wounded. He has served for ten years, has— which is the post he wants. We need staff officers, German and who are active and intelligent; he is young, you will learn from him the exact nature of his speaking, it is leave to seek a speedy death in your hands; this kindness and see that he be not killed, for he is a nephew of the Madame Calandrin whom you saw. His mother too is as amiable as Madame Calandrin.

APPENDIX III

TRANSLATION OF DECISION OF THE 5TH AUGUST 1810

Whereas the above report made in the Council of Commerce and Manufacture, with the following results:

(1) That the Government of the United States is informed by her act of the 1st March 1809 by the ordinance of the 20th May following that the French Ships and Merchandise therein contained, which enter their ports, should be put under sequestration, but that the execution of the aforesaid ships and merchandise has been ordered.

(2) That it has been established by the same Act that when the relations with France have been re-established the confiscations will continue to have their effect.

(3) That the Act of the 1st March 1809 has been put to execution on every occasion that has presented itself, not only against the Cargoes but against the French Ships as well. We have ordered, and order what follows:

(1) That the funds arising from the sales of the American Cargoes which have been sold up to this date, and the total which has been placed on deposit in the Caisse d'Amortissement, shall be transferred to the public tre-

APPENDIX III

any order as to the disposition of the Cr and always wishing to treat the United as possible and using only with regret prisal against them. We agree that the ican ships entering our ports shall not prisoners, but shall be sent back to their

(5) The dispositions above stated shall with regard to all the American ships wh our ports and been sequestered since 1808 to the 1st of May of the present date of the Act by which the United St the Act of the 1st March 1809.

(6) In the future and up to the 1st c date fixed by the letter of our Minister o to the plenipotentiary's of the United revocation of our decrees of Berlin and ease that our conditions established i letters are fulfilled) the American ships ports; but the unloading cannot take license signed by our hand, and on a rep Council of Commerce stating that they denationalized by their submission to t Council of Great Britain and that they travened decrees of Berlin and Milan.

Given at our Palace of the Trianon 1810.

Sign

INDEX

tr of Congress of March 1800, 188, 207

lams, John, second President of United States, 4 note

John Quincy, minister to Russia, appointed peace commissioner, ix, xi, 1, 4, 11-12, 16, 20-23, 27-36, 279, 287, 293; and Albert Gallatin, 181, 184, 236, 267; letters from Albert Gallatin, 187-90, 258-61; and the seizure of the Apollon, 192-93; letter to James Gallatin, 225, 254-55.

Willman, 28

blington, Mr., 260

x en-Savoie, 148, 185, 190-91

x la-Chapelle Congress, 142

cantara, Hôtel d', in Ghent, 27

xander, Emperor, offer of mediation, vii, 1, 6, 18, 19, 21-23,

26, 235, 259, 279; and Napoleon, 5, 53; Moreau's appreciation of, 8, 9; a forgotten note, 13; guest of England, 21, 23, 24; Lafayette's interview with, 21-23;

and Mme. de Staël, 23, 25; reception of Albert Gallatin, 24-

25; opinion of Albert Gallatin, 25

Alps, the Simplon Pass, 55

America, Mme. de Staël's property in, 37, 38-39, 42-43; return of the Gallatins to, 235-38, 240-43

American War of Independence, 42

Americans in Paris, Albert Gallatin and, 201, 210; in London, 263, 264, 265

Amiens, 134

Amnesty, the Indian, 32

Amsterdam, 13, 15

Andelys, Les, 68

Anglais, Café, 207

Angoulême, Duc d', and Albert Gallatin, 86, 124, 221, 241; and the death of the Duc de Berry, 157; and Richelieu, 203-04; letter to Albert Gallatin, 243; wedding presents to James Gallatin, 250

Duchesse d', and James Gallatin, 64; and Mme. Gallatin, 90, 235-36; jewels of, 116-177; and the Duc d'Orléans, 140; death of the Duc de Berri, 157-58; personality, 168, 221; and Frances Gallatin, 193-94; at St. Cloud, 216

INDEX

Argental, Count d', letter from Voltaire, 295-96
Ashburton, Lord. See Baring,
Alexander
Astor, John Jacob, and Albert
Gallatin, vi and note, vii, 80, 174, 201, 229; manners, 167; and
Mme. Bonaparte, 179
Aumont, Duc d', 241
Austria, question of succession,
261

BACHALAN'S Hotel, Copenhagen, 3 Bache, Richard, letter from Benjamin Franklin to, ii
Balmat, Jacques, 215
Baltimore, 61-62, 211, 221, 237, 240, 244-46, 252, 255
Archbishop of, and M. Pas-
cault, 249

Bank of the United States, presidency refused by Albert Gallatin, 197, 201

Baring, Alexander, letters from Albert Gallatin, vii, 3, 279-80,
287-91; negotiations with, 12,
14; friendship with the Gallatins, 72, 77, 172, 174, 203, 210, 222, 262-64, 268, 276; offer to James Gallatin, 224; letter to
Albert Gallatin, 280-87, 291-94

Baring, Mrs. Alexander, 72, 203, 210, 272

Barry, Colonel, letter to the Marquis of Huntly, 52-56

Bassano, Duc de, 166, 172, 187-88

Bates, Miss, 256, 272

Bathurst, Lord, 15, 20, 30-32, 59

Bayard, Mr., vi. 1. 2. 12. 13. 15. 16.

Berri, Duc de, in
Albert Gallatin
130; and the ton, 104-5; a family, 106; a and James Ga 140; the Duc innovations at the Elysée, 154
61; effect of h
nesse dorée, 182

Duchesse de,
family, 106
of, 124, 14
Duke, 156 against De Tuileries,
Duc de B 177; and plosions, 1 latins, 220

Berthal, Mme., 139-40, 148, 15
76, 180

Berthe, la Reine,

Berthollet, 44, 45

Bertrand, Gen., i

Béthisy, Mme. c
235

Bingham, Miss,
See Baring, M

Biron family, the

Blanc, Mont, asc

Blockade in time
of, 70

Boar hunts, 113-

"Bocage," house

Boigne, Comtess
note, 98. 104. 1

INDEX

aparte—cont.

Louis, 49 note, 234
 Madame Mère, 179, 236, 255
 Mme. Patterson, stories of, 51-52, 61-62; present to James Gallatin, 58; and Mme. de Staël, 58, 138; in Paris, 88-91, 163, 194; her son "Bo," 90, 165, 179; return from America, 101; letter to Albert Gallatin, 144; popularity, 165; praise of Napoleon, 187; friendship with the Gallatins, 195, 200-2, 236, 240, 247, 263 note; hatred of the Catons, 197, 222; hatred of the Bonapartes, 236-37; admiration of Mlle Pascault, 237, 245
 Napoleon, and Alexander, 5; mentioned by Gen. Moreau, 7; America and, 16-17; and Mme. de Staël, 52-53; at Elba, account by Mr. Douglas, 52-56; and the Pope, 63; escape from Elba, 64; march on Paris, 65-66; interview with Albert Gallatin, 67-68; decision of the Allies, 74-75; ceremony in the Champs de Mars, 75; Waterloo, 76; Albert Gallatin's opinion of, 78-79, 179; at St. Helena, 111; the Manuscript of St. Helena, 121; dukes created by, 172; death, 186; the Trianon decree of August 5, 1804, 187-188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000

Borghèse, Hôtel, 90, 209-10, 220
and note
 Borghese, Princess Pauline, 90, 179
 Borgo, Count Pozzo di, 94, 98, 100, 106, 118, 120-21, 124, 141 and note, 144, 163-64, 169, 174, 181, 197, 200, 220, 227, 229, 242, 257, 265, 268; a sauterie for Frances Gallatin, 170-71; on the committee of Crockford's, 203; on the relations between Great Britain and the United States, 258-59
 "Boston," Game of, 230
 Harbour, 230
 "Bouche du Rhône," 63
 Bouffé family, the, 247
 Boulogne, 128, 134
 Boundary question, settlement of the, 126, 133, 256, 259, 261, 275
 Bourbon, Duc de, 108, 141 and note, 237
 Bourbons, Albert Gallatin and the, 50; Napoleon on the, 53, 54; position in France, 78-79
 Bourg, house of Jacques Cœur at, 57 note, 105, 108-9, 218 la Reine, 60
 Bourget, Lac du, 191
 Braynton, Captain, of the Spartan, 2
 Breteuil Marquis de, a chasse au sanglier, 113-14
 "Brickha," use of a, 88
 Briennen, Mlle von, 112
 Brighton, the Pavilion, 127-31, 262, 268, 276; Albert Gallatin summoned to, 268-69
 Brissot, Claude Antoine, 159, 157,

INDEX

Broglie—cont.

Duchesse de (Albertine de Staël), 93, 106, 109, 135-36, 145, 152-53, 191, 193, 207, 216, 233-34, 242, 255

Brompton, 15

Brooks's Club, 132

Brougham, Mr., 274

Broughton Castle, 70-71

Brown, Mr., 260

Mrs., daughters of, 160, 166

Thomas, name taken by the Duc de Berri, 166

Bruges, 110

Brummell, Beau, 127-28

Brunswick, Duke of, 95, 295, 296

Brussels, Napoleon's march on, 75-76; Albert Gallatin sent to, 109; the plains of Waterloo, 111

Buckingham House, 265, 271, 272

Budé, Eugène de, 216

Jules de, 59, 152, 153, 216

Mme. de, 99

M. de, 47, 58, 59

Burgundy wine, 217

Byron, Lord, 56, 59, 167, 215

CALENDRIŒ, Mme., 295-96

Callon, major-domo, 87

Cambridge, Duchess of, 132

University of, 28 note

Campbell, G. W., 16

Canada, protection of, 28; Napoleon's interest in, 68; traffic with, 70

Cannes, Napoleon at, 64

Canning, Mr., 257, 258, 261, 262, 266; Prime Minister, 268, 269-71; sayings of, quoted, 269-70;

Caron, M.
205

Carrolls, the Carrol-town

Cassel, Pa.

Cassillis, L.

Lord,

Castelcical

Prince

"Castle Sc

Castlereag

tions, vi

30, 34, 5

and Alb

126, 133

Castries, M

Catholic e

Caton, Mr

note, 165

Cavour, C

Count

Cayla, Mn

211, 223

Célestine,

Chabot, C

Chambéry

Chamoix,

Chamouni

Champeau

Champon

Champs d

75

Elysé

Chapelle,

Charles I

VII

not

XII

Charlotte,

Que

INDEX

Chelsea Marshes, 132
 Chevet, chef, 235
 Chillon, Château de, 50
 Chio, 57 note
 Choiseul, Duc de, 295-96
 Christmas, in Paris, 93-94, 116-21, 149-53, 174, 193, 224-28; in London, 264
 Clairricarde, Lord, 220
 Clare, Mlle, 107-8
 Clary, Mlle Eugénie Désirée. See Sweden, Queen of Mlle Julie, 50, 122
 Clay, Henry, the negotiations, 16, 21 and note, 27, 28, 30-34, 69, 84, 181, 260, 267; letters from Albert Gallatin to, 269-71, 273-76
 Clermont, 146 note
 Clermont-Tonnerre, Duc de, 51, 58, 94, 99
 Duchesse de, 51, 57 and note, 94, 99, 215
 Coeur, Jacques, 57 and note, 105, 108-9, 218
 Cognac, Duc de, 151
 Columbia River, navigation, 133
 Commercial treaty, the negotiations, 70, 73, 76, 77, 133, 142, 256, 266-67, 276
 Compagne, hunting at, 178, 179, 238; Corps de Chasse from, 198
 Compton, Mr., 132
 Condé, Prince de, 92 and note, 108, 141, 161
 Condorcet, Marquis, 60 and note, 184
 Marquise (Mlle de Grouchy), 184

Cornwallis, Miss, 222
 Mr., 217
 Courland, coast of, 4
 Duchesse de, 220, 222
 Coursergues, M. Cl
 Crawford, William H.
 Albert Gallatin to from Lafayette, 5 in the Neptune, 7
 Albert Gallatin's
 84; and the Pro
 207, 225; paraly
 Crockford's, 203, 26
 Cuckfield, 132
 "Curriele," the, 91

 DALLAS, G. H., 2, 1
Dames de la halle, th
 Dashkoff, Count, vi
 David, M., portra
 Gallatin, 64-67
 Decazes, M., Mini
 note, 123, 137; ar latin, 149; accu Duchesse de Berri
 sion to London,
 168
 Demidoff, Prince, 58
 Dessolles, General,
 Devonshire, Duke o
 267
 House, 267, 272
 Diderot, 60
 Dijon, 63, 217
 Dinner customs in Diodatis, the, 47, 2
 Diplomatic Service
 221

INDEX

Dudley, Lord, 273
 Duer, Lady Cathrine, 267
 Dumont, M. André, 14 and note
 Dundas, Mr., 52
 Duras, Duc de, 51, 106
 Duchesse de, 51, 90, 106, 122,
 137, 139, 235-36
 Dutch women, impressions, 27

 ECOLE de Droits de Paris, 182
 Edouard, footman, 87
 Edwards, Miss, 220, 222, 229-30, 271 Elba, Napoleon on, account of an interview, 52-56; escape from, 64
 Ellsworth, Mr., 11
 Elysée Bourbon, 98
 the, entertainments, 124, 142, 144, 154
 Embassy, laws governing the,
 266
 England, peace policy of, 5, 6, 8-9, 16-18, 25-26, 35; Napoleon on,
 54; and America, position in 1816, 86; foreign policy in 1822,
 217; the mission to, 255-56
 Englishwomen, impression of, 15
 Enville, D'. See Rochefoucauld
Escalade, the, 61
 Escar, Duc d', 178
 Esterhazy, Prince, 265
 Etiquette, French, 115, 145, 195
 Eton festivities, 23, 271
 "Etrennes de la Noblesse," extract from, 110
 Europe, American trade with, 70
 Eustace, Mr., at The Hague, 103, 111, 113

Fisheries qu
 the, 32-35
 FitzJames, I Flahaut, Cou
 Florida, sale
 Fontaineblea
 198, 200, 2
 Footpads in Force, Com
 114, 118, 2
 Comtess
 114, 1
 Duc de
 Mlle Ca
 Fouquet, Ma
Français, the France, fina Waterlo trouble, 2
 Mme. d
 Franklin, l
 Richard
 General, U
 French Emb
 271 Friendship I Fulton, Rob
 and note,

 GALATI, Cou
 Galiani, Abb
 Galitzin, M
 101, 114, 1
 230, 232,
 Force, Co
 Prince,
 118 Princes 118,
 Gallatin, Al

INDEX

Gallatin, Albert—cont.

lations with Spain, 142; discovery of the Trianon decree, 187-90; Geneva in 1821, 191; his first marriage, 219, 247; the vice-presidency, 249, 251; conditions of English mission, 255-56; and George IV, 268-69

Letters from :

Ashburton, Lord, 276-78
Baring, Alexander, 280-87, 291-94
Bonaparte, Mme., 144-45
Humboldt, Alexander von, 44-45
Monroe, James, 84
Moreau, General, 7-10
Staël, Mme. de, 37-39

Letters to :

Adams, J. Q., 187-90, 258-61
Baring, Alexander, 3, 279-80, 287-91
Clay, Henry, 269-71, 273-76
Crawford, W. H., 15-19 his brother-in-law, 2
Jefferson, Thomas, 78-80
Lafayette, General, 19-20
Monroe, James, 81-84, 88-89
Staël, Mme. de, 40-44
Albert, his son, in Paris, 78, 94, 98, 101, 103, 125; at Fontainebleau, 113; life in America, 179, 186, 196, 207, 217, 228-29, 233, 235, 239, 247; illness of, 211; wife

Gallatin—cont.

Frances, 78, 82;
France, 85; in 96-98, 101, 10
125, 134, 135,
76, 180, 219;
Bonaparte, 91 admiration for saillies, 103; a bleau, 113, 211
party, 116-18;
137; at the El Suresnes, 148-mas preparati pearls for, 152 163, 167, 177,
Mr. Astor, 1
for, 168-70; a 169-71; scarle
72; at the F 178; trick play on, 181-82; churches, 183
190, 192, 195, 220, 221, 224, proposals, 193
Mamie Kitty,
cals, 208, 210
Edwards, 222, Christmas pl reception by t d'Angoulême, Louis XVIII,
ent from Poz
242; return
242-45; lette
father, 246-4
Puseault, 24
247-48

INDEX

Gallatin, James—cont.

XVIII, 86; a broken arm, 174; marriage, 249-50; his son born, 254; the English mission, 256; return to America, 258 note

Josephine, present from Duchesse d'Angoulême, 250; her son born, 254, at Friendship Hall, 254-55, and the English mission, 256; a letter from, 264. See also Pascault, Mlle Josephine

Louis, 61

Mlle de, 152

Mme. Albert, 45, 61, 77, 78, 82-84; voyage to France, 85; life in Paris, 87, 95, 96, 98, 103, 114-16, 124, 134-37, 190, 206, 208, 209, 210, 212; reception by the king, 89, 92; observance of Sunday, 94, 104, 171; visit of Louis XVIII to, 95; at Fontainebleau, 113, 211; court functions, 116-17, 141; Christmas festivities, 117-21, 152-53; illness of her husband, 139-40; and her son, 142-43, and Mme. Rodaspate, 144-45; removal to Geneva, 147-48; and Frances, 161, 168-69, 172, 185, 195; and the "Comtesse de C," 174; religion, 180; taking for London, 181; in Aven-Sava, 190-91; at Marseilles, 191-92

Gallatin, Mme. mas in America, 181; per at London, 181; reception at London, 181; life in London, 181-182

Gallatin Vaucluse
Gambier, Lord
Gambling in London, 208

Geneva, the City
Genève, 36, 48, 103, 114, 138, 147, 248; deputations
Genève, 103, 114, 138, 147, 248; deputations
Genève, 103, 114, 138, 147, 248; deputations

Lake of, 103

Genève, Mme. de

George I, 24, 25

III, 132, 133

IV, accession

202-3, and 257, and

262, 272

and Albi

69, 276

footman, 28

Mlle, 162

Ghent, the Great

vn, 20, 21, 26

51, 59, 60, 61

74, terms of 1

144

Ghosts, family

Goldschmidt, tapestry

Golschich, Lord

Golschich, Mme.

also Robinson

INDEX

ande Pharamond, Fontainebleau, 230
 ant, Mr., 274
 ayson, Mr., 97
 cent Britain, policy towards United States, 275-94
 essee, emancipation of, 253-54
 effuhle, M. de, 156
 égoire, Abbé, 149 and note
 enoble, 65
 reuse, head by, 67
 reville, Charles, 262 and note, 267, 272
 rey, Earl, 72, 73, 262
 rimm, 60
 ria Nez, Cape, 134
 riette, world of, Paris, 97
 rotz, Comte and Comtesse de, 118 uccioli, Marquise de, 167
 uiche, Comte de, 125-26
 Duc de, 102, 125

AGUE, negotiations at The, 109-12 all, Captain Basil, book of, 52 anson, 17
 arrie, Mr. Levitt, 24, 25
 arrowby, Lord, 273
 arvey, Mr., 165
 antercombe, monastery of, 191 avre, 68, 69, 91
 ay, Mrs., 83
 layti, independence of, 257, 260
 Henri II of France, 63
 IV of France, 92, 160
 Henrietta-Maria, Queen, 125-26

Humboldt, Baron, aid given in the negotiations by, vii, 24, 26 and note; letter to Albert Gallatin, 44-45; friendship with Albe
 Gallatin, 93, 100, 124, 174, 24
 268, 269
 the brothers, 174, 185
 Hundred Days, the, 90
 Huntly, Lord. See Gordon, Duke Huskisson, William, 261, 270 and
note, 273-75

ILLINOIS, State of, 28
 Impressment, question of, 70
 Indemnity question, the, 166-6
 188, 191, 227
 India, trade with, 70
 Indian tribes of North-West Territory, question of sove eignty, 27, 30-31
 Indiana, State of, 28

JAMES I, 24
 Jay, Mr., 11, 277
 Jean, footman, 87, 176
 Jefferson, Thomas, 23, 44, 4
 letter from Albert Gallatin, 7 80
 Jena, 95
 Jerome, King. See Bonaparte
 Jerome
 Jews, civil rights, 149
 "John of Bologna," statue by, 1
 Jones, Captain Lloyd, 2, 279
 Joséphine, Empress, 49 note, 63
 July 4th in Paris, 210
 "Junius (Letters of)," 60
 Jura, shooting in the, 216

INDEX

Lafayette, M. de—cont.

106, 124, 172, 174, 181, 197, 200, 214, 235, 242; letter from Albert Gallatin, 19, 20; letter to W. H. Crawford, 21-23; opinion of Napoleon, 78; visit of the Gallatin to, 91, on liberty, 120; the conspiracy, 165;
mysterious spots of, 212-13, 221-22; visit to America, 236, 253-54; and the Duke
d'Orléans, 257, at Boulogne,
257; petty plots, 259-60

Lafitte, M., 165

Lallage, Mlle., 115

Lakes, the Great, question of control, 28, 31

Lansdowne, Marchioness of, 272

Marquis of, 72, 270, 273, 275

Lauriston, Marquis de, 168

Lausanne, address from president of, to Albert Gallatin, 50

Laval, Comte de, 232

Lavalette, Monneur de, 48

Lavalle, Duc de, 179-80

Duchess de, 179-80

Law, of South Sea Bubble fame, 168

Lawrence, Mr., 261, 268, 276

Leeds, Duke of, 63 note

Leicester House, Leicester Fields, 24

Leman, Lake, 48

Lent in Paris, 103-5, 141-45, 178, 201, 218

Leopold, Prince, 256

Leopold, Prince, 256

London—con-

20, 21; See Sunday m. m., 1815,
Street, 69, 265-67, 273
1826, 255-6

Londonderry,

reagh, Lord

Loom XIV, 1

114

XV, ball

marria

XVI, ma

150

XVII, m.

108, 21

XVIII, 1

m., 174

14 note

repted

61-64,

41, m recapit

royal

65-66,

Jerome

recept

59, 92,

latin, 5

101-2,

famaly

incep,

183, 19

death

157-58

161,

INDEX

Lucien, valet, 87, 91, 111, 128,
 131-32, 134, 140, 148, 175, 218,
 223, 243, 247, 250
 Lucy, Lady, 264
 Lullius, the, 47
 Lapone, Guy de, 44, 45, 87, 197, 204, 212, 226
 Luxembourg, 145
 Laynes, Duchesse de, 216

 MACON, 63
 Madison, President, vi, 1, 34, 55
 Maille, Comtesse de, 230
 Duc de, 158-59
Maison Dorée, 94, 141, 239
Maisons de jeu, 207
 Mahbran, 208
 Manne Kitty, nigger cook, 205-6,
 212-13, 225-26
 Mantou, 68
 Marais, the, Paris, 173
 Marchmont, Mr., 110-11
 Marie Antoinette, 52 note, 56, 71, 184
 Marie Louise, 55-56
 Marie-Theresa, 60
 Marqueto, the, 63
 Marmont, Marshal, Napoleon on,
 55
 Maubourg, M. Latour, 168
 Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Grand
 Duke of, 58
 Mer de Glace, the, 215
 Metternich, Prince, Napoleon on,
 54; policy, 261
 Meunier, Baron, 168
 Meyer and Bruxner, Messrs., 280
 Michael, Count Paul, 152

Monroe, James—con- latin, 80-82; let Gallatin, 84
 Mrs., 83
 Monsieur, and Alber
 95, 193; visit to M
 95; alleged intrig
 201; and Welling
 the death of the 157; promise to at Versailles, 183
 Gallatins, 241; le
 Gallatin, 243
 Montesquieu, Guy
 Mlle. de, 226
 Mme. de, 230
 Montgomery, Mrs
 199-200; kindnes
 Montmorency, Du 223, 227
 Duchesse de, 2
 Mathieu de,
 Compiègne,
 263-64
 Vicomte de, 2
 Moreau, Gen., con-
 Albert Gallatin,
 count of, 6 not silver of, 121
 Morgan, Lady, 179
 Morlaix, 6 note
 Mormorsen, cat, 5
 Mourussa, the cat,
 Murats, the, 190
 Murillo, a madonn

NAPOLEON III, 49
 Narishkin, M., 229

INDEX

Nesselrode, Count, 3 Netherlands, Albert Gallatin sent to, 103-4
 Newcastle, United States, 2
 New England States, the, 17
 Geneva, the, home at, 186,
 242, 246-47, 250, 255
 Orleans, defense, 44, 45
 Year in Paris, 94, 118, 12, 137, 149, 154, 193-94, 271-72, in Baltimore, 249, in London, 265
 York, 78, 81, 243-44
 Niagara, Fort, 28
 Nicholas V, Pope, 54 note
 Nicholson, maiden name of Miss
 Gallatin, 105
 Nicholson, the, reception of the Gallatins, 244
 Norfolk, newspaper report of, 16
 North Cray, 244
 North Western Territory, opinion of of Indian sovereignty, 27-28, 30-31
 Norman, England, and Russia, policy towards, 4
 Notre Dame, Paris, ceremony on Christmas Eve, 94
 Nova Scotia, trade with, 70
 Nuffe, Duc de Liancourt, 106, 249
 O'Connor, General, 184
 Miss, 184
 O'Donnell, Mr., 249
 Mrs., see Paken 25, 246
 Ogilby Lister, Mr., 124
 Ohio, State of, 28

Orleans, the Duchess
 106 149 de B rice, cath latins
 family, 151, 144, 149
 Hord
 tious 269 ish I Miss 178, the Re
 Orleans, Gen
 146, 150
 London
 Miss
 Gall
 Orr and fa
 Marqu
 Marqu
 Miss,
 250
 M. A.
 6, 10 extended, 149
 Orrington Ho
 Paken, Gen
 Palmer Ho
 the 148

INDEX

Paris, cont.

75; return of the Gallatins in 1816, 85; Rue de l'Université, 87; gardens of the Palais Royal, 91; public baths, 111; return of the Gallatins, September 1817, 113; Christmas and the New Year in, 115-20, 137, 152-53, 171, 193-94, 224-29; return of James Gallatin in 1818, 134-35; in 1819, 149; in 1822, 217; in 1826, 258

Parish and Girard, Messrs., vi-vii
Mr., 188

Parker, Mr., 91, 213

Pascault, brother of M. Pascault, 248

Mlle Henrietta. See Reubel, Mme.

Mlle Josephine, beauty of, 237-38, 245-49; marriage to James Gallatin, 249-50

Mme., 246, 248

M. (Marquis de Poléon), 61, 62, 237, 245, 246 and note, 247-48; and the Archbishop of Baltimore, 249-50; illness, 251-52

Pasquier, M., 168

Patonkin, Princess, 58

Patterson, Mr., 245, 247

Mrs. Robert, 194, 197, 200; married Marquis of Wellesley, 222, 263 and note

Robert, 165, 263 note

Pavilion Henri Quatre, St. Germain, 204

Peace, European Treaty of, 23 and United States, the treaty

Pictet, M.
M.,

Pin, Tou

Pitt, Wil

Place, M

and no

Plaisance

Duc

Poitiers,

Poix, Pri

Poléon,

cault,

Poletien,

Polignac

Pope, th

Portal, M

Portland

Portuga

Prangins

Praslin,

Pregny,

Press o

Napol

Prussia,

Puységu

155, 1

QUELLO

Quincy,

RACINE

Ratifar,

Rébecq

112

Mr

Récami

136-3

Red Inc

Regent

INDEX

Revolution, the French, references
 to, 61, 146-47, 164
 Richelieu, Duc de, and Albert
 Gallatin, 86 and note, 91, 94,
 100, 138, 139, 149; resignation, 123, 137; and the Queen of Sweden, 137, 161-62, 163, 194,
 223; pension, 138; refuses office, 161; Monsieur and, 161; and Cha-teaubriand, 164; and the indemnity, 166-67, 188; return to power, 168; honesty of, 174;
 death, 203-4; and Mme. du Cayla, 223
 Ministry, the, 168
 Richmond, 271
 Robespierre, 7 Robinson, Mr. Frederic (afterwards Viscount Goderich), Vice-President of Board of Trade, 72 and note; the negotiations in London, 73-77; terms of Ghent treaty, 126, 133
 Rocca, M., 104, 216 and note
 Rochefoucauld d'Enville, Duc de la, 26, 89, 94, 150, 229
 Mathieu de la, 200
 Sosthène de la, 94, 102, 150, 155, 169, 223
 Rochejacquelin, M. de, 122
 Rochment, Pictet de, 118
 Rocky Mountains, and the boundary question, 275
 "Roger de Coverley," 119
 Rogers, Captain, of the Peacock, 85, 243
 Rohan, Duc de, 106
 Rohan-Châbot, M., 157
 Role Chateau du, 214, 216

Rousseau, t.
 "Rout," a Rovigo, Du 165
 Rozay, Châ
 Mlle R
 Rush, Mr., patches t
 Russell, M
 Peace Co
 Rutland, D

 SACCONNEX
 Sackett's H
 St. Cloud, 2
 Domin
 246 Germa
 Helena
 uscri
 James'
 Lawren
 70
 Mary's 192
 Paul's Petersl
 sions Pierre,
 Pierre
 Sebast
 Sainte-Cha
 Saladins, th
 Salon, cust
 Sanglier, ch
 52, 200
 Sarrasins, t
 Savigliano
 Savoy, Du

INDEX

- rent, Duc de, 151
 Duchesse de, 241
 rgy, 50
 re, M. de, vi, 168
 renouks, 128
 rllon, Mr., 87 and note, 113, 167, 201
 rly, 23
 rmonde, M., 56
 rnoon, M., 168
 rnpdon Pass, the, 55
 rmonde, M. J. C. L., appreciation tion of Albert Gallatin, 38, 47
and note, 51
 ating, 196, 198, 202, 226-27, 242
 ac trade, Alexander on the, 24;
 Napoleon on the, 53, 68, the captured slaves, indemnity for owners, 126, 259
 lto, Comte and Comtesse, 100
 plia, Electress, 24, stories of, 26, 27
 rel, Agnes, 57 note, 218
 ith American Republics, 142 am, and the Treaty of 1819, 142
 satish colonies revolt, 142, 253
 Embassy, Paris, 171, 208, 227, 249 astin, frigate, 2
 eic payments, suspension of, in United States, 51
 adnick, Marshal, 22
 adl, Mine de, friendship for Albert Gallatin, vii, 46, 200; and Alexander, 23-25, letters to
 Albert Gallatin, 1814, 37-39,
 letter from Albert Gallatin, 40
 Stafford, Marchioness of, 71, 235, 261-62, 266
 Stirling, Lord, 267
 Stratford, Lord, 62 note
 Strong, 17
 Stuart, Chevalier, 106, 118-19, 167, 204, 208
 Sunday, in London, 15; in Paris,
 Surames, 148-49
 Sutherland, Countess of, 8
 Stafford, Marchioness of Sweden, Queen of, wife of Bern dotte, 122 and note; and L
 de Richelieu, 137, 161, 163, 19
 203, 204, 223; a lampoon o
 151
 Swiss girls, habits of, 217
 TALLEYRAND, Prince, 106, 123-24,
 162-63, 168, 227, 265, 268
 Talma, actor, 162
 Talmont, Princesse de, 122
 Tankerville, Lord, 126
 Terror, the, 146-47, 164
 Tête de Noir Pass, Chamouni
 215
 Thénard, 44, 45
 Thorne, the Misen, 204
 Tibet, Treaty of, 54
 Times, the, criticism of the Tre of Ghent, 74
 Todd, John, 2
 Tortoni's, 208, 212
 Tour, Ballot La, friendship, 10
 118 Carillon la, 195, 212
 Mine Carillon la, 195, 230
 Tower of London, 70, 132

INDEX

Tudorcy, reception of Napoleon, 65-66, cigarette, 144. Funeral of the Duc de Berry, 150. Duc d'Angoulême de Berry at, 160. Bomb explosion at, 177. reception, &c., 177, 210, 280-21

Twenty years' war in Europe, 41

Unknowns, reception of Lafayette, 230, 234-34

United States, Union Decree of August 5, 1810, 267, 304

Varennes, Mlle de la, 126

Vaud, Canton de, address to Albert Gallatin, 561, 562

Vaux Francon, 61

Venezne, Paolo, "Queen Father before Alexander," 147

Versailles, the Petit Trianon, 26. entertainment at, 12 note, 56-57, 183-84. the Terrace at, 57. visits to, 101. the "Fountain of Anguine" and, 211

Vestry, Mine, 16, 183

Vendôme, Catherine de, above Louisa, 561

Vermont, Congress of, 37, 74, 79

Villar, Duc de, 66

Ville Jary, 55

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Vincennes, 207, 217, 260

Washington, impression of, 84

Washington, 84

Waterloo, 76

Watts, Lady

Watts, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

Wendell, 84

